PREFACE

The present edition of the Kumārasaṁbhava contains seven cantos which are universally acknowledged to be the original work of Kālidāsa. Most of the MSS end the poem with this canto, though Mallinātha has also written his commentry on the eighth. This edition is based on available printed texts and commentaries. All this material has been indicatcd as under :

Nārāyaṇa (ना.) Aruṇagirinātha (अ.) Bharatamallika (भ.) Vallabha (व.) Mallinātha (म.)

One of the many new features of this edition is the insertion of captions at every change of topic. Comparative study has also been made with similar descriptions in the Rāmāyaṇa and other works which are given in the footnotes. Important extracts from the available printed commentaries have also been added in the footnotes. Two useful appendices are given at the end. The first contains the alphabetically arranged Pāda-Index of all the verses which would prove useful for an intensive study of the poet. The second gives the most popular tributes paid to Kālidāsa by writers, both ancient and modern. In this edition we have included English Translation and notes of the late Principal, Ralfh T. H. Griffith which appeared in 1879. Comparison with the English authors have also been made at several places.

The introduction contains the study of the poet from different points of view, viz. Kālidāsa as a Natianal poet, as a keen student of Vālmīki, his love for nature, his conception of love, reference to Open Air Theatre, historical background of Śiva, the meaning of the word Kumāra, and finally, the story of the seven cantos in brief. Efforts have also been made to trace the various descriptions to their sources.

I am grateful to my learned predecessors like Griffith, Aurobindo Ghosh, Hillebrandt, Ryder, Tagore, V. Raghvan, and above all, the ancient commentators, whose valuable works on Kālidāsa stand as enduring monuments of their selfless labours.

I am also thankful to Prof. Sadhu Ram M.A., Head of the Sanskrit Dept., Kirorimal College, University of Delhi, for the help he has given to me in revising the English portion of this edition. I cannot forget Shri Hans Raj, the author of 'Vedic Koṣa', for his latest contributions on Vedic Mythology. I am grateful to Shri Ras Bihari Shastri for efficiently reading the proofs of Sanskrit portion of the book.

I cannot refrain from expressing my sense of obligation to my wife Shrimati Jai Rani Sehgal, M.A. B.T., who took pains in the compilation of Pādānukramaṇikā and Stutipuṣpāñjali appended at the end.

I present the fruit of my humble labour to the lovers and students of Sanskrit, and in the words of our Poet Laureate, leave it for the readers to judge its worth :

INTRODUCTION

KĀLIDĀSA—NATIONAL POET

There is a famous saying that formerly on the occasion of making an enumeration of the poets, the name of Kālidāsa fell on the little finger. As no other poet was found to be his peer, the second finger, Anāmikā (nameless), remains true to its name even to this day. Thus, Kālidāsa has unequivocally been acknowledged as a master poet and still occupies an unrivalled position in the field of Kāvya literature of India.

From very early times Kālidāsa has won high praise from poets and critics. His name is mentioned in the Aihole inscription of Ravikīrti (634 A.D.). Bāṇa, the celebrated court poet of king Harṣavardhana found his poetry to be sweet, fresh, and soothing like blossoms. Not only did the art critics find ineffable pleasure in his word-pictures but sculptors also derived inspiration from his artistic descriptions. This is evident from the Ajanta frescoes. The late Sanskritist, Dr. Kielhorn, after careful study, was of the view that Kālidāsa provided motifs even for these paintings.

Mallinātha, the celebrated commentator of the 14th century, was the first who gave great popularity to his poems by his inimitable commentaries. Since then many more commentaries have been written on his works. The histrionic excellence of his plays, too, tempted the interpreters to introduce into them so much extraneous matter that we find more than two versions of each of them. It is, therefore, a difficult job for scholars to reconstruct the original texts. The Śākuntala has come down to us in four versions which are indicative of its high popularity. This drama has not only influenced the Indian mind but has also won unstinted praise from the Western connoisseurs of art and literature. In the last century, a selection of hundred best classical works of the world was made and Śākuntala was included in that list. The Meghadūta is another masterpiece of the poet which has found as many as fifty commentators and perhaps an equal number of translators in different languages of the world, a fact significant of its originality, poetic beauty and human appeal. Śrī Ānandavardhana, a Kashmirian critic was doubtful whether there existed any third poet in India besides the two great poets Vālmīki and Vedavyāsa. But Kālidāsa makes his doubt to be baseless. Jayadeva, the inspired singer of the Gīta-Govinda, has paid the highest tribute to Kālidāsa by calling him as 'Kavikula-guru.'

It was in the eighteenth century that William Jones, Judge of Calcutta High Court, rediscovered this forgotten genius of India. His English translation of the Śākuntala brought about renaissance in Sanskrit studies in Europe. Western scholars learnt Sanskrit and laid the foundation of Indian studies in the West. Goethe, one of the leading poets of Germany, honoured by Napoleon the great, as the leader of the European literature, was so much fascinated by this play that he called it the meeting place of Heaven and Earth. In his Faust, he introduced a similar prologue, by means of a conversation on the stage between the stage-manager and the poet regarding the play to be performed. Herder, another German poet, called Kālidāsa as the National poet of India, in whose works Indian life and culture are found fully reflected.

Kālidāsa has drawn living pen-pictures of Indian landscape, mountain scenery, and feminine beauty. His description of Himālaya is wonderfully picturesque. The way in which he describes the various cities and other geographical details shows that he had visited those places and had travelled extensively all over India. The Meghdūta, which is perhaps the most perfect specimen of verbal felicity, contains references and allusions to shrines, cities, and rivers. In the Raghuvamśa, too, the conquering march of Raghu covers the whole of India from East to South, and West to North. The topographical and climatic descriptions agree strikingly with the conditions of these places at the present time. The confluence of the Gangā and Yamunā has a great sanctity attached to it in the Indian mind. It had the same place of honour in the times of Kālidāsa is proved by the beautiful description of it in his epic poem. Moreover, the descriptions of the cities Avanti and Ayodhyā, of the rivers like Revā, Siprā, Saryū, and Tāmraparṇī, of the mountains like Vindhya, Sahya, and Mahendra, and of the sea coast with its tall palm, and coconut trees leave no doubt about the wide and correct knowledge of the poet of the geography of India and its flora and fauna.

Kālidāsa is primarily an appreciator of beauty both in nature as well as in human figure. In almost all his descriptions of woman's beauty he has identified her with Nature. Her face is either like the moon or a blooming lotus, her arms imitate the creeper in slenderness, her waist is so slim that it can be measured in one hand, her thighs surpass the plaintain tree and the elephant's trunk and her feet are moving lotuses.

The excellence and perfection of Kālidāsa's poetry has been universally recognised both in the East as well as in the West. His works have been translated almost in all the languages, not only of India but of the whole world.

In recent times, great thinkers like Śrī Aurobindo Ghosh and Bal Gangadhar Tilak and poets like Tagore were fascinated by the charm of Kālidāsa's poetry and were eloquent in their praises. In one of his poems, Tagore has paid a glowing tribute to Kalidāsa in the following words :

In recent times, great thinkers like Śrī Aurobindo Ghosh and Bal Gangadhar Tilak and poets like Tagore were fascinated by the charm of Kālidāsa's poetry and were eloquent in their praises. In one of his poems, Tagore has paid a glowing tribute to Kālidāsa nthe following words :

When you chanted, poet, to the god and goddess,
Śiva and Parvatī, the song of the birth of Kartika,
All round stood the ghostly attendants ; on the mountain crest
Descended slow the peaceful evening clouds.
The lightning did not play, the thunder was mute ;
Kārtika's peacock lowering its tail
Stood quietly by the side of Pārvatī,
Curving its lifted neck ; sometimes, in a gentle smile
Trembled the lips of the goddess ; anon a long sigh
Was breathed unnoticed ; again, the swelling tears
Appeared at the corners of the eyes ; when at length
Confused shame descended silently
On her lowered eyelids, you, poet, glancing at the goddess,
Suddenly stopped your unfinished song.

A STUDENT OF VĀLMĪKI

Kālidāsa was a keen student of Vālmīki. Utprekṣāvallabha, the author of the Bhiksāṭana-kāvya calls Kālidāsa 'anusārasaralaḥ', i.e. easy to follow like his predecessor Vālmīki. He owes much of his inspiration for his works to the first Great Epic. The very titles of his two poems, Kumārasaṁbava and Raghuvaṁśa, are taken from the Rāmāyaṇa. The lyric poem—Meghadūta owes its inspiration to the Hanumat-sandeśa in the Adi-kāvya. In the fourth act of the Vikramorvaśīya, the description of the love-lorn condition of Purūravas bears evident signs of influence of the Rāmāyaṇa. Kālidāsa was so much fascinated by the epic description that he could not help putting the following verse verbatim into the mouth of the King Purūravas :

कच्चित्क्षितिभृतां नाथ दृष्टा सर्वाङ्गसुन्दरी ।
रामा रम्ये वनोद्देशे मया विरहिता त्वया ।। (अरण्यकाण्ड ६४. २८)

Again, king Purūravas asks a peacock for some clue of his beloved Urvaśī's whereabouts.

नीलकण्ठ ममोत्कण्ठ वनेऽस्मिन् वनिता त्वया।
दीर्घापाङ्ग सितापाङ्ग दृष्टा दृष्टिक्षमा भवेत् ॥ (४, २१)

This verse bears a close resemblance to the description of the wistful plight of Rāma at the sight of the Pampā Lake :

पश्य लक्ष्मण नृत्यन्तं मयूरमुपनृत्यति।
शिखिनी मन्मथार्तैषा भर्तारं गिरि सानुषु ॥
मयूरस्य वने नूनं रक्षसा न हृता प्रिया।
तस्मान्नृत्यति रम्येषु वनेषु सह कान्तया ॥ (किष्किन्धाकाण्ड, १. ३६-४१)

Kālidāsa has even borrowed from the Ādi-kāvya choicest expressions like the following :

'केचित्पर्याप्त कुसुमाः पादपाः', 'पर्याप्तपुष्पस्तबकस्तनाभ्यः'।
'…लतावधूभ्यः' (किष्किन्धाकाण्ड १. ८७ इत्यादि)

and has used them with effect in the Kumārasaṁbhava, e.g.

पर्याप्तपुष्पस्तबक-स्तनाभ्यः स्फुरत्प्रवालौष्ठमनोहराभ्यः।
लतावधूभ्यस्तरवोऽप्यवापुर्विनम्रशाखाभुज - बन्धनानि ॥ (३. ३९)

As already stated, the titles of his two poems are borrowed from the Bālakāṇḍa of the Rāmayana as would appear from the following verses :

एष ते राम गङ्गाया विस्तरोऽभिहितो मया।
कुमारसम्भवश्चैव धन्यः पुण्यस्तथैव च ॥
भक्तश्च यः कार्तिकेये काकुत्स्थो भुवि मानवः।
आयुष्मान् पुत्रपौत्रैश्च स्कन्दसालोक्यतां व्रजेत् ॥
स यथा कथितं पूर्वं नारदेन महर्षिणा। (१. ३७. ३१-३३)
रघुवंशस्य चरितं चकार भगवानृषिः ॥ (बालकाण्ड ३. ९)

Kālidāsa's description of the advent of spring in the Kumārasaṁbhava bears evident similarity with that found in the Epic. The lamentation of Rati, too, is an echo of that of Tārā at the death of her husband Vālin. The following extracts from the Rāmāyaṇa are an eloquent testimony of its influence on Kālidāsa :

भर्तुः प्रियतरा नूनं वानरेन्द्र मही तव ।
शेषे हि तां परिष्वज्य मां च न प्रतिभाषसे ॥
मम चेमां गिरं श्रुत्वा किं त्वं न प्रति बुध्यसे ।
इदं तद्वीर शयनं यत्र शेषे हतो युधि ॥
मामनाथां विहायैकां गतस्त्वमसि मानद ।
शूराय न प्रदातव्या कन्या खलु विपश्चता ॥
शूर भार्यां हतां पश्य सद्यो मां विधवां कृताम् ।
अवभग्नश्च मे मानो भग्ना मे शाश्वती गतिः ॥
भर्तारं निहतं दृष्ट्वा यन्नाद्य शतधा गतम् ।
सुहृच्चैव हि भर्ता न प्रकृत्या मम च प्रियः ॥
आहवे च पराक्रान्तः शूरः पञ्चत्वमागतः ।
पतिहीना तु या नारी कामं भवतु पुत्रिणी ॥
धनधान्यैः सुपूर्णापि विधवेत्युच्यते जनैः ।....(४, २३, ३-१३)

Nor can the influence of Mandodarī's lamentation be denied. Even Dr. A.B. Keith says : "There is a parallel too for Rati's despair, when Vālin falls, Tārā addresses him with words not less sincere because they bear the stamp of the classic style : 'Why dost thou speak no more to thy beloved ? Arise and share this fair couch with me ; the best of men lie not, as thou, on the ground. Too dear dost thou hold, lord, the earth even in death, since me thou dost leave alone and her hast clasped in thine embrace. Ended our days of joy together in the fair forest : sunken am I in a deep sea of sorrow, without joy, without sustenance, since thou hast departed. ' Hard my heart that it can see thee stretched on the ground and yet not break from sorrow."

LOVE OF NATURE

Man is the child of Nature. Wherever he may go he will always find himself in the lap of Nature, from which he cannot escape. Even in big and overcrowded cities, where the eye is obstructed by tall mansions and narrow streets, nature insinuates itself through the windows and appertures in the form of a stray waft of the air and a fiugitive ray of light, and at night reveals its grandeur overhead as a dark blue canopy studded with iridescent gems. There is no country in which the poets have not drawn inspiration from Nature. Ṛgveda, the revealed book of Aryans, openly declares that it was on the slopes of the mountains and the confluence of the rivers that the mind of the sages was animated with inspiration :

उप ह्वरे गिरीणां सङ्गमे च.नदीनां
धिया विप्रो अजायत ।

[viii, 6, 28].

It is a common experience that a loury day casts a pall of depression on the mind, while the mild glow of the morning, alive with fresh air and chirping of the birds, exhilarates the mind and throws it in high spirits. The seasons, too, have a changing effect on the mind, sometimes damping, and at others elevating. The Vedic Sages personified all the striking phenomena of Nature such as the Dawn, the bright Sun, the Clouds, the Storm and the Rivers, and had paid glowing homage to them which have endured to this day.

Kālidāsa's intimate sympathy with Nature strikes a student of his work at every step. His young maidens have moonlike faces, creeper-like arms, lotus-like hands and feet, and flower-like exuberance of youth pervading through every limb of their bodies. The various epithets, describing the limbs of the heroines, are both significant and striking. While describing the beauty of his heroines the poet says :

अस्याः सर्गविधौ प्रजापतिरभूच्चन्द्रो नु कान्तिप्रदः
शृङ्गारैकरसः स्वयं नु मदनो मासो नु पुष्पाकरः ।
वेदाभ्यासजडः कथं नु विषयव्यावृत्त कौतूहलो
निर्मातुं प्रभवेन्मनोहरमिदं रूपं पुराणो मुनिः ।।

[1. 10].

"In the act of her creation, was the Moon of lovely splendour that became the progenitor ? Was it cupid himself who concerns himself solely with the sentiment of love ? Or was it the month of Spring which has a wealth of flames ? For how could the old sage grown dull by the study of the Vedas, and who is devoid of all desires of worldly pleasures, have produced this beautiful form that captivates the mind."

And again :

आभरणस्याभरणं प्रसाधनविधेः प्रसाधनविशेषः ।
उपमानस्यापि सखे प्रत्युपमानं वपुस्तस्याः ॥

[ii, 3].

"Friend, her beautiful form is an ornament of ornaments, an excellent decoration of decorations and the counterstand of comparisions to all standards of comparison."

In the Śākuntala, the king says :

सरसिजमनुविद्धं शैवलेनापि रम्यं
मलिनमपि हिमांशोर्लक्ष्म लक्ष्मीं तनोति ।
इयमधिकमनोज्ञा वल्कलेनापि तन्वी
किमिव हि मधुराणां मण्डनं नाकृतीनाम् ॥

[1, 20].

The meanest vesture glows on beauty that enchants :
The lotus lovelier shows amid dull water-plants :
The moon in added splendour shines for its spot of dark ;
Yet more the maiden slender charms in her dress of bark.

And further :

अधरः किसलयरागः कोमलविटपानुकारिणौ बाहू ।
कुसुममिव लोभनीयं यौवनमङ्गेषु संनद्धम् ॥

[1, 21].

Her arms are tender shoots ; her lips are blossoms red and warm ;
Bewitching youth begins to flower in beauty on her form.

In fact, the limbs of a woman are, as it were, the sprays and flowers of creepers. On the other hand, his plants, trees and animals too, are capable of human feelings and response. The mango tree and the Navamālikā creeper are a happy couple wedded to each other in love.

The young fawn refuses water from the hand of a stranger but clings to the apron of Śakuntalā at the time of her departure. She had tended him like an adopted child and healed his bruised mouth with 'ingudī' oil. She had also bestowed motherly care on the plants and trees of the hermitage and was loth to slake her thirst before having watered them first under her fostering care. They grew and bloomed, and the time of their efflorescence was always an occasion of festivity for her. They, too, responded with equal ardour by sending their gifts for her nuptial adornment:

क्षौमं केनचिदिन्दुपाण्डु तरुणा माङ्गल्यमाविष्कृतं
निष्ठ्यूतश्चरणोपभोगसुलभो लाक्षारसः केनचित् ।
अन्येभ्यो वनदेवताकरतलैरापर्वभागोत्थितैर्
दत्तान्याभरणानि नः किसलयोद्भेदप्रतिद्वन्द्विभिः ॥

[iv, 5]

In the Kumārasaṁbhava the poet is at his best:

उन्मीलितं तूलिकयेव चित्रं सूर्यांशुभिर्भिन्नमिवारविन्दं
बभूव तस्याश्चतुरस्रशोभि वपुर्विभक्तं नवयौवनेन ।
अभ्युन्नताङ्गुष्ठनखप्रभाभिर्निक्षेपणाद् रागमिवोद्गिरन्तौ
आजह्रतुस्तच्चरणौ पृथिव्यां स्थलारविन्दश्रियमव्यवस्थाम् ॥
... ... [I, 32-49]

"Now beauty's prime, that craves no artful aid,
Ripened the loveliness of that young maid:
That needs no wine to fire the captive heart,—
The bow of Love without his flowery dart.
There was a glory beaming from her face,
With love's own light, and every youthful grace:

Ne'er had the painter's skilful hand portrayed
A lovelier picture than that gentle maid ;
Ne'er sun-kissed lily more divinely fair
Unclosed her beauty to the morning air."

In Ṛtusaṁhāra, the poetical description of the six seasons and of the beauties of Nature as well as the portrayal of Indian landscape clearly manifest the poet's deep sympathy with Nature. Here Kālidāsa has exhibited his unique skill in interweaving the ebb and flow of human emotions with the changing moods of the seasons. In Vikramorvarśīya the rainy season produces an illusion in the distracted mind of the king who dispels it by saying :

नवजलधरः सन्नद्धो ऽयं न दृप्तनिशाचरः
सुरधनुरिदं दूराकृष्टं न नाम शरासनम् ।
अयमपि पटुर्धारासारो न बाणपरम्परा
कनकनिकषस्निग्धा विद्युत्प्रिया न ममोर्वशी ॥ (iv, 1)

"This is the new cloud ready to pour down and not a haughty demon equipped with armour, this is the rainbow far extending, and not the bow bent very much, this also is the sharp shower of rain and not a volley of arrows and this, the lightning charming like the streaks of gold on a touchstone, and not my beloved Urvaśī."

In Raghuvaṁśa we come across a graphic description of the spring but its most effective description is found in the third canto of Kumārasaṁbhava where the whole Nature is athrill with new life and love at the advent of the spring. The Aśoka bursts into blossoms at once, the bees swarm on the mango sprouts, the cuckoo utters a sweet and passionate note which awakens love in the hearts of young women :

मधु द्विरेफः कुसुमैकपात्रे पपौ प्रियां स्वामनुवर्तमानः ।
शृङ्गेण च स्पर्शनिमीलिताक्षीं मृगीमकण्डूयत कृष्णसारः ॥
... ... [iii, 36-39]

"And at the call of Spring the wild bees came,
Grouping the syllables of Kāma's name.
How sighed the spirit o'er that loveliest flower
That boasts no fragrance to enrich its dower !
For Nature, wisest mother, oft prefers
To part more fairly those good gifts of hers.
There from the tree Palāśa blossoms spread,
Curved like the crescent moon, their rosiest red,
With opening buds that looked as if young Spring
Had pressed his nails there in his dallying :
Sweet wanton Spring, to whose enchanting face
His flowery Tilaka gave fairer grace :
Who loves to tint his lip, the mango spray,
With the fresh colours of the early day,
And powder its fine red with many a bee
That sips the oozing nectar rapturously."

Thus, we see that Kālidāsa was a keen observer of Nature in its various aspects of which he has drawn such living word pictures that they appear as real to the reader's eye. He had a heart overflowing with sympathy for all forms of life and an eye appreciative of natural beauty whose charm he made tangible with the power of his imagination and felicity of his expression. Ryder, while applauding the works of the poet remarks :

"Kālidāsa's knowledge of nature is not only sympathetic, it is also minutely accurate. Not only are the snows and windy music of the Himālayas, the mighty current of the sacred Ganges his possession ; his too or smaller streams and trees and every littlest flower. It is delightful to imagine a meeting between Kālidāsa and Darwin. They would have understood each other perfectly ; for in each the same kind of imagination worked with the same wealth of observed fact. Fully to appreciate Kālidāsa's poetry one must have spent some weeks at least among wild mountains and forests untouched by man ; there the conviction grows that trees and flowers are indeed individuals fully conscious of a personal life and happy in that life. The return to urban surroundings makes the vision fade ; yet the memory remains, like a great love or a glimpse of mystic insight as an intuitive conviction of a higher truth."

CONCEPT OF LOVE

According to ancient Hindu Śāstra there are four values in life called Dharma (righteousness), Artha (material welfare), Kāma (emotional satisfaction) and Mokṣa (final emancipation). The first three pertain to this wordly existence, while the last belongs to the other worldly life. As a matter of fact, these three, when pursued with proper balance are the means for the attainment of the last i.e. final emancipation. The first serves as a check on the other two preventing them from running wild.

Man was born on this earth in the lap of mother Nature. His primay need was self-preservation for which he required food and shelter. To satisfy this need he snatched from Nature whatever he found edible and whatever provided him with cover. His next need was the continuation of his race for which he had a companion, his counter-part. Mutual attraction of both brought them together and by their union they could reproduce themselves and create a new life on the earth. The first pursuit of man for self-preservation was impelled by the force of Artha and the second of reproduction by that of Kāma. Kāma is thus the creative force in the Universe. Even the first creation was the result of Kāma of the attraction of Puruṣa towards Prakṛti.

Creation, whether biological or intellectual is essentially the work of art. Says the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa 'In giving birth of a child, the woman produces a work of art'. Every conception is immaculate and at child birth a woman has the aura of sanctity about her. In silence and humility, she feeds and rears the child and in that innocent life she sees the images of God. Mothers of great men must have this feeling particularly, but then, at the beginning all women are mothers of great men—It isn't their fault if life disappoints them later...Intellectual creation is the work of a poet, the second creator on the earth. Impelled by Kāma he reproduces himself in his literary productions and fine arts and he finds emotional satisfaction in it. It is for this reason that all arts from the subject matter of Kāma Śāstra.

It would be interesting to note that all art revolves round the feminine form, whether it is conceived in the shape of Prakṛti (Nature) or in that of the human figure (woman). Kālidāsa is essentially a poet of both Nature and woman. His descriptions of Nature are as fascinating as those of his women are enthralling. In order to drive home the beauty of every part of a young woman's body, he draws his similies from nature. Kumāra Saṁbhava furnishes us with some of the example of such similies. This might lead one to suppose that Kālidāsa considered Nature to be more beautiful than a woman. But no, he has clearly declared woman to be far superior to Nature in her bodily charm and personal adornments so much so that even Nature herself felt envious of her and tried to eclipse her in beauty by her own floral wealth :

रक्ताशोकरुचा विशेषितगुणो बिम्बधरालक्तकः
प्रत्याख्यातविशेषकं कुरबकं श्यामावदातारुणम् ।
आक्रान्ता तिलकक्रियापि तिलकैर्लग्न द्विरेफाञ्जनैः
सावज्ञेव मुखप्रसाधनविधौ श्रीर्माधवी योतिषाम् । [Māl iii, 5]

Now beauty gives a sense of intense pleasure to the mind. It is the cause of natural attraction between man and woman, which if allowed to run wild exhibits itself in its gross of sensual passion and voluptuousness but if kept in restraint, it transforms itself into love—an emotion both pure and divine. Kālidāsa has described virgin beauty in its most intoxicating form which in his Śākuntala breaks the bonds of restraint. But then it has to face repudiation and suffer humiliation and ultimetely has to expiate for the lapse by suffering and penance. In Kumārasaṁbhava, too, youthful beauty is almost at the point of demolishing, by its overpowering appeal to the senses, the bulwark of restraint built by austere penance, but suddenly the fiery eye of higher knowledge opens and consumes the welling tide of passion. Dr. Rabindranath Tagore has made a very brilliant comparison between the love-romances of these two works of Kālidāsa. The following extract from the translation of one of his Bengali articles is worth quoting here. He says :

"We cannot help comparing the Kumarasaṁbhava with the Śākuntala; their theme is essentially the same. In both of them the union which Cupid tried to effect was accursed of the gods ; it failed, and in its failure perished amidst all its gorgeous artistic environment like a youth struck dead on his floral bridal couch. Thereafter, came another union,—effected by bitter sorrow and severe penance ; a union of quite a different character, stripped of all the external robes of beauty and circled with the pure white halo of goodness."

"The union which presumptuous Cupid undertook to bring about, was preceded by abundant preparations. In the two hermitages of Kāṇva and Śiva, situated outside the limits of society, the poet has given the fullest opportunity to unreasoning and precipitate young Love, with no less grandeur of accessories than skill of contrivance."

"When Pārvatī went forth to conquer Śiva by means of her beauty, she for a moment shook the hermit's calm. But Śiva angrily repelled her, and then she could hardly manage to crawl back home abashed at this humbling of her youthful beauty."

"So, too, Kāṇva's foster-daughter had one day to return in shame in spite of all the rich treasure of her youth and beauty. The curse

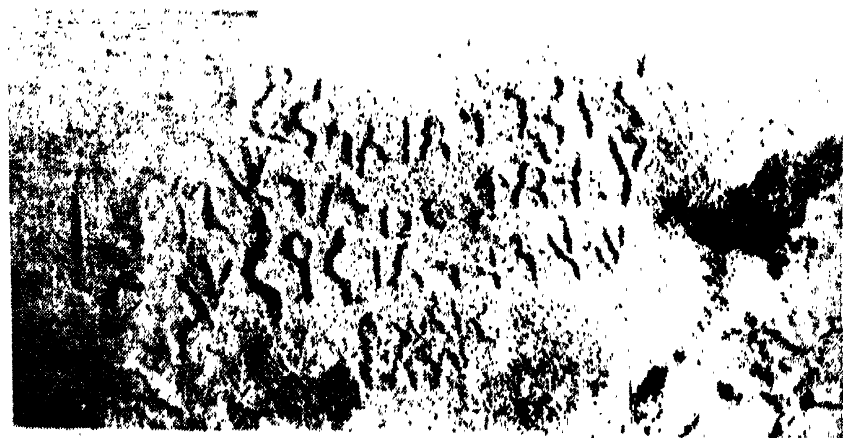

"Therefore did Pārvatī, after herre buff by Śiva, 'sincerely despise physical charms' and 'wish to make her beauty achieve success.' How can beauty achieve success ? Not by means of dress or decorations, as she had learnt from her recent failure,—but by means of 'religious austerities in a life of meditative trance.' She clad herself in coarse robes and wasted her body by hard ascetic devotions."

"Thus, we see that the theme of the Kumārasambhava and the Śākuntala is the same. In both poems Kalidāsa has shown that while Infatuation leads to failure, beneficence achieves complete fruition,—that Beauty is constant only when upheld by Virtue, that the highest form of Love is the tranquil, controlled, and beneficent form,—that in regulation lies the true charm and in lawless excess the speedy corruption of Beauty. This ancient poet of India refuses to acknowledge passion as the supreme glory of love ; he proclaims Goodness as the final goal of Love."

REFERENCE TO OPEN AIR THEATRE

Archeologists have proved the existence of an open air Theatre before 300 B. C. Reference to this has been found by Dr. T. Bloch in inscriptions in the Sitabenga and Jogimārā caves. The former inscription is in verse and describes some scene sculptured in the caves but the Jogimārā inscription contains passages which appears to be of Durvāsas is merely emblematic, it is an invention of the poet. A loose and secret union like that of Duṣyanta and Śakuntalā is accursed in all times. The bright flash of infatuation lasts for a moment,—then comes the darkness of despondency, shame and neglect. Such is the eternal law. In all ages and in all countries the discarded woman has been forced to realise that 'physical charms are vain' and to 'creep back homewards with a heart left lonely of its god.' Physical charm is not the highest glory or supreme beauty in a woman."

The former inscription is in verse and describes some scene sculptured in the caves but the Jogimārā inscription contains passages which appears to be the fragments of dialogue between low characters. Dr. Lüders, a distinguished indologist, also holds the same view. In his opinion the following verses from the Meghadūta as well as the Kumārasaṁbhava show that caves of mountains were used as haunts for nightly revels and love-sports by the dancing girls and their lovers. For Example :

नीचैराख्यं गिरिमधिवसेस्तत्र विश्राम-हेतोस्
त्वत्संपर्कात् पुलकितमिव प्रौढ-पुष्पैः कदम्बैः ।
यः पण्यस्त्री-रतिपरिमलोद्गारिभिर्नागराणाम्
उद्दामानि प्रथयति शिलावेश्मभिर्यौवनानि ॥ मेघ०

[1, 25].

There, for a brief rest, thou wilt make a halt on the Nicais hill, bristling with Kadamba trees in full bloom, as if thrilled with joy at thy touch—the hill that proclaims the wanton revels of the youthful rakes by its caves redolent of the perfumes used by their paramours in their love-sports."

वनेचराणां वनिता-सखानां दरीगृहोत्सङ्ग-निषक्तभासः ।
भवन्ति यत्रौषधयो रजन्यामतैल-पूराः सुरत-प्रदीपाः ॥

[Kum. 1. 10]

i.e. Where, at night, the (phosphorescent) herbs shed their luminous glow into the interior of the caves and serve as oilless lamps to the foresters who are engaged in love-sports with their wives.

When, amidst enjoyments, garments of the young girls were cast off they felt embarrassed. A cloud would then hasten to cross the mouth of the cave and serve as a curtain. e. g.

यत्रांशुकक्षेप-विलज्जितानां यदृच्छया किंपुरुषाङ्गनानाम् ।
दरीगृहद्वार-विलम्बिबिम्बास्तिरस्करिण्यो जलदा भवन्ति ॥

[Kum. 1, 14].

Where the clouds, accidentally floating across the mouths of the caves, serve as sereens to cover the shame of the Kiṁpuruṣa-ladies who blush at their skirts being removed.

Drs. Macdonell and Windisch believe that the Indians learnt to build open air theatre after the model of the Greek theatre, but this view is erroneous because we find minute details of design and construction of a theatre in the Nāṭyaśāstra of Bharata which was written long before the advent of the Greeks :

काष्र्णायसं प्रतिद्वारं द्वारविद्धं न कारयेत् ।
कार्यः शैलगुहाकारो द्विभूमिर्नाट्यमण्डपः ॥
मन्दवातायनोपेतो निर्वातो धीरशब्दवान् ।
तस्मान्निवातः कर्तव्यः कर्तृभिर्नाट्यमण्डपः ॥ (2. 81-82)

That is to say, the playhouse should be made like a mountain cavern and it should have two floors on two different levels and small windows. And it should be free from wind and should have good acoustic quality. For in such a playhouse, protected from the interference of wind, voice of actors and singers as well as the sound of the musical instruments will be distinctly heard.

The tradition of building playhouses in caves is also supported by Dandin in certain passages in his celebrated work Daśakumaracharita.

It, therefore, becomes clear that open spaces on the hills as well as the mountain caves were utilised for this purpose. Mallinātha also bears testimony to this fact while commenting on the word 'Śilāveṣma' in the Meghadūta at I. 26.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF ŚIVA

ŚIVA is one of the most important deities in the religious worship of the Hindus. He is the third of the Trimūrti, the other two being Brahmā 'the Creater' and Viṣṇu, the Preserver. His prototype is the god Rudra in the Ṛgveda. He is lauded in three or four hymns. He is portrayed as wielding bows and arrows, lightning shaft and thunder-bolt.

अर्हन्बिभर्षि सायकानि धन्वार्हन्निष्कं यजतं विश्वरूपम् ।
अर्हन्निदं दयसे विश्वमभ्वं न वा ओजीयो रुद्र त्वदस्ति ॥ (Rv., ii. 33. 10)

i.e. Worthy thou bearest arrows and bow ; worthy the adorable all coloured necklace ; worthy thou wieldest all this force : there is nothing mightier than thou, O Rudra.

"The hymns addressed to him" says Dr. Macdonell "chiefly express fear of his terrible shafts and deprecation of his wrath. His malevolence is still more prominent in the later Vedic literature. The euphemistic epithet ŚIVA 'auspicious' already applied to him in the Ṛgveda, and more frequently, though not exclusively, in the younger Vedas, became his regular name in the post-Vedic period. Rudra is, of course, not purely malevolent like a demon. He is besought not only to preserve from calamity but to bestow blessings and produce welfare for man and beast. His healing powers are mentioned with especial frequency, and he is lauded as the greatest of physicians.

Maruts or storm gods are said to be the sons of Rudra. They are described as born of the laughter of lightning. They are said to move in a troop, armed with spears or battle axes and wearing helmets on their heads.

'They gleam with armlets as the heavens are decked with stars ;
Like cloud-born lightnings shine the torrents of their rain.'

[Rv. ii. 34. 2].

The Maruts are compared with lions and wild boars. For example :

'The Maruts spread the mist abroad,
And make the mountains rock and reel,
When with the winds they go their way.'

[Rv. viii. 7. 4]

His different epithets throw a good deal of light on the development of his character. The word kapardin 'having dusky matted hair' and śikhin, 'red, tawny,' are significant. The hymns in the Atharvaveda preserve his old characteristics of malevolence. He is invoked to ward off the evil effects of goblins and demons.

.Scholars are of opinion that the word 'keśin' and others connected with Rudra indicate the fusion that took place in India among different races and peoples. The conquering Aryan race adopted systems of thought, religious beliefes and practices from the primitive races. The process of assimilation of the conqeured by the conquerors has been fully reflected in the development of the character of Rudra. 'Keśins' are associated with Munis, a word of non-Indo-European stock. The Kanarese language has preserved the original meaning 'one excited, inspired or maddened.' The Keśins were possibly some non-Aryan people who are recorded in the Kaṭhaka Saṁhitā. This also explains the Yogic practices associated with Śiva in post-Vedic literature.

The other epithet of Śiva is Kṛttivāsas or 'skin-clad' form in the Saṁhitās of the Kṛṣṇa Yajurveda. He has a rat for his vehicle, his sister is Ambikā and he lives somewhere beyond the Mūjavat mountain. The Śatarudriya hymn in the Yajurveda contains a sort of apotheosis of Rudra in the Vedic age. He is described as Girīśa, Giricara, and Giritra, and his hosts are called 'Niṣādas', 'Punjiṣṭhas', keepers of dogs, hunters, carpentors, and chariot-makers. This accounts for the association of Śiva with the rat, the Himālaya and its residents, the Kirātas.

All this is indicative of the non-Aryan influence on the character of Śiva. Another non-Aryan influence is seen in the association of Phallus-worship with the cult of Śiva. This happened by the fusion of the male god of the Indus Valley people (3000 B.C.), who are referred to as 'Śiśnedevās' in the Ṛgveda, with Rudra as a fertility deity having several things in common with the former.

MEANING OF THE WORD KUMARA

Kumāra is known by several names and epithets in the Purāṇas. He is called Skanda, Kārtikeya and Ṣāṇmātura, and is said to possess six faces and twelve eyes. His consort is called Devasenā. He rides a peacock and his face is likened to that of a goat. Similar designations and descriptions of Kumāra occur in a number of passages in the Mahābhārata. For instance in Vanaparva (Chap. 224) we have:

षट्शिरा द्विगुणश्रोत्रो द्वादशाक्षिभुजक्रमः ।
एकग्रीवैकजठरः कुमारः समपद्यत ॥

In the Chāndogyopaniṣad (vii. 26. 1), Skanda is equalled with Sanatkumāra. It appears that the epithets like Ṣāṇmātura and others are purely figurative. The designation Kārtikeya is significant as meaning 'the son of the Kṛttikās.' Now this constellation consists of six stars which accounts for the epithet Ṣāṇmātura.

The following passage of Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa (1. 1. 2. 1 ; 5. 1. 1) shows that the presiding deity of Kṛttikās is Agni :

एतद्वा अग्नेर्नक्षत्रं यत् कृत्तिकाः ।

Agni, again, is associated with number six in the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa (1. 2. 9) ;

अग्निः षट्पादस्तस्य पृथिव्यन्तरिक्षं द्यौराप ओषधिवनस्पतय इमानि भूतानि पादाः ।

This, too justifies the name Ṣāṇmātura. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (vi. 11. 3 18) states that Kumāra is the ninth form of Agni :

तान्येतान्यष्टौ रुद्रः, शर्वः, पशुपतिः, उग्रः ।
अशनिः, भवः, महादेवः, ईशानः, अग्निरूपाणि ।
कुमारो नवमः ।

This can be explained by the derivation of the word Skanda from √skadi to make dry. One of the functions of Agni is to make things dry. Yāska also corroborates this trait of Agni by one of his derivations, 'Aknopano bhavati,' i.e. it is not wetting. Now, let us see how peacock came to be associated with Skanda as his vehicle. This appears to have been due to the double meaning of the word 'Śikhin' which means both Agni (i.e. possessing Śikhās or flames) as well as peacock (i.e. possessing Śikhā or a tuft). Moreover the flames of fire when they rise aloft appear like the bustling of the feathers of a peacock.

As Kumāra is a war god and is the commander of the army of the gods, the epithet of his consort Devasenā is, therefore, quite appropriate.

STORY OF THE KUMĀRA-SAṀBHAVA

Kālidāsa is universally admitted to be the master of classical Sanskrit. But his intimate knowledge of the Vedic language is also evident from one stanza in his Abhijñānaśākuntalam which he has composed in a Vadic metre. Not only that, he had imbibed the spirit of the Vedic Ṛṣis as well, and, like them, he lived close to Nature and was an ardent lover of forests, rivers, mountains, caves, hermitages and wild animals and birds. The facility of his style, the rich variety and appropriateness of his similes, the flight of his fancy and his deep sympathy with human emotions and sentiments have exercised a strong appeal to the minds of all who have studied his works.

The theme of Kumārasaṁbhava relates to the birth of the War-god Kumāra in order to kill the demon Tāraka who was a constant pest to the gods. This could only be possible by bringing about the union of Pārvatī, the daughter of Himālaya, with the god Śiva, who had renounced the world and imposed on himself the vow of penance.

In this poem Kālidāsa has glorified Kāma, the god of love, who though vanquished by rigorous self-control, ultimately emerges triucmphant inasmuch as he succeeds in casting the delicate arms of Pārvatī round the neck of Śiva like a noose.

The poem begins with a brilliant description of Himālaya, on whose summits the clouds flit about, displaying a riot of colour produced by the reflection of the variegated hues of minerals abounding on its rocky slopes. How could snow mar the exquisite beauty of this magnificent monument of Nature which proudly stands like the measuring rod of the earth and is a mine of inexhaustible treasures? The presiding spirit of this lofty mountain, being wedded to the nymph Menakā, gave birth to an elf-like child—a girl of infinite loveliness and charm, as if fashioned by the Creator by assembling together the pick of prettiness from all the paragons of beauty. Her name was Pārvatī, the mountain-fairy, in keeping with the place of her birth. She was destined to be the spouse of Śiva as foretold by the sooth-sayer Nārada, the fleet-footed and ubiquitous herald of the gods. Accordingly, she was permitted by her parents to wait upon and cast the spell of her charms on the god Śiva, who was engaged in the practice of his self-imposed vow of penance.

In the second canto, the gods, in great terror of the demon Tāraka, are depicted as going to Brahma for help, who tells them that the demon can only be destroyed by the son of Śiva begotten on Pārvatī. In the third canto, Indra, the lord of the gods, implores Kāma to come to their rescue by smiting the heart of the imperturb able Śiva with the love of Pārvatī. Kāma agrees, and with the aid of his friend Madhu, who makes an untimely spring burst forth in the grove in which Śiva is absorbed in deep meditation, lies in ambush waiting for the opportune moment for shooting his flowery arrow. Presently, Pārvatī arrives in the full bloom of her youth, like a creeper laden with fresh flowers, to wait upon Śiva. No sooner does she bend to make her offering of flowers at the feet of Śiva than Kāma shoots his formidable arrow. For wee bit of a second Śiva is perturbed but soon he collects himself and, discharging a flame from his third eye, burns down Kāma and reduces him to ashes.

The fourth canto contains the pathetic lament of Rati for her dead husband, which is one of the most touching elegies in Sanskrit literature. Madhu, the presiding spirit of the vernal season, consoles her. But she, being utterly unconsolable in her despair, resolves to immolate herself on a burning pyre. Only a voice from heaven, assuring her of her reunion with Kāma, dissuades her from her resolve.

At this tragic turn of the events, Umā is sorely disappointed in her love and resolves to achieve her object, which she had failed to achieve by the lure of her charms, by means of macerations and austere penance. In the fifth canto she is depicted as exposing herself to the inclemencies of weather and subjecting herself to severe and unbearable hardships. In the course of her asceticism, Śiva, in the garb of a hermit, appears before her and tries to depict the lord of her desire in appalling colours. She rebukes him bitterly for his attacks and, refusing to hear any more of his calumny, proceeds to leave the place. At that Śiva is deeply touched and being so overwhelmed he reveals his identity and gathers her into his arms in a close embrace.

This makes the ground ready for the marriage and, in the sixth canto, the poet presents a gay picture of the solemn rite. The Seven Seers accompanied by Arundhatī call on the Himālaya to seek the maiden's hand for Śiva. The daughter stands near her father with her eyes downcast counting the leaves of the lotus in her hand. He looks to his wife Menā for guidance in that important domestic matter. The seventh canto begins with the marriage, and the rich details of the ceremony are graphically described. Pārvatī's mother, amidst moments of pleasure and displeasure, is at a loss to put correctly the painted marks on her darling's forehead and places wrongly the sacred thread which is later on corrected by the nurse.

BIRTH OF THE WAR-GOD.

Canto First.

UMĀ'S NATIVITY.

FAR in the north HIMĀLAYA, lifting high
His towery summits till they cleave the sky,
Spans the wide land from east to western sea,
Lord of the hills, instinct with deity.
For him, when PṚTHU ruled in days of old
The rich earth, teeming with her gems and gold,
The vassal hills and MERU drained her breast,
To deck HIMĀLAYA, for they loved him best;
And earth, the mother, gave her store to fill
With herbs and sparkling ores the royal hill.

Proud mountain-king! his diadem of snow
Dims not the beauty of his gems below.
For who can gaze upon the moon, and dare
To mark one spot less brightly glorious there?
Who, 'mid a thousand virtues, dares to blame
One shade of weakness in a hero's fame?
Oft, when the gleamings of his mountain brass
Flash through the clouds and tint them as they pass,

Those glories mock the hues of closing day,
And heaven's bright wantons hail their hour of play ;
Try, ere the time, the magic of their glance,
And deck their beauty for the twilight dance.
Dear to the sylphs are the cool shadows thrown
By dark clouds wandering round the mountain's zone,
Till frightened by the storm and rain they seek Eternal sunshine on each loftier peak.

Far spread the wilds where eager hunters roam,
Tracking the lion to his dreary home.
For though the melting snow has washed away
The crimson blood-drops of the wounded prey,
Still the fair pearls that graced his forehead tell
Where the strong elephant, o'ermastered, fell,
And clinging to the lion's claws, betray,
Falling at every step, the mighty conqueror's way.
There birch-trees wave, that lend their friendly aid
To tell the passion of the love-lorn maid,
So quick to learn in metal tints to mark
Her hopes and fears upon the tender bark.

List ! breathing from each cave, HIMĀLAYA leads
The glorious hymn with all his whispering reeds,
Till heavenly minstrels raise their voice in song,
And swell his music as it floats along.
There the fierce elephant wounds the scented bough
To ease the torment of his burning brow ;
And bleeding pines their odorous gum distil
To breathe rare fragrance o'er the sacred hill.

There magic herbs pour forth their streaming light
From mossy caverns through the darksome night,

And lend a torch to guide the trembling maid
Where waits her lover in the leafy shade.
Yet hath he caves within whose inmost cells
In tranquil rest the murky darkness dwells,
And, like the night-bird, spreads the brooding wing
Safe in the shelter of the mountain-king,
Unscorned, uninjured ; for the good and great
Spurn not the suppliant for his lowly state.

Why lingers yet the heavenly minstrel's bride
On the wild path that skirts HIMĀLAYA'S side ?
Cold to her tender feet—oh, cold—the snow,
Why should her steps—her homeward steps—be slow ?
'Tis that her slender ankles scarce can bear
The weight of beauty that impedes her there ;
Each rounded limb, and all her peerless charms,
That broad full bosom, those voluptuous arms.

E'en the wild kine that roam his forests bring
The royal symbols to the mountain-king.
With tails outspread, their bushy streaming hair
Flashes like moonlight through the parted air.
What monarch's fan more glorious might there be,
More meet to grace a king as proud as he ?

There, when the nymphs, within the cave's recess,
In modest fear their gentle limbs undress,
Thick clouds descending yield a friendly screen,
And blushing beauty bares her breast unseen.

With pearly dewdrops GAṄGĀ loads the gale
That waves the dark pines towering o'er the vale,
And breathes in welcome freshness o'er the face
Of wearied hunters when they quit the chase.

So far aloft, amid Himālayan steeps,
Couched on the tranquil pool the lotus sleeps,
That the bright SEVEN who star the northern sky
Cull the fair blossoms from their seats on high ;
And when the sun pours forth his morning glow
In streams of glory from his path below,
They gain new beauty as his kisses break
His darlings' slumber on the mountain lake.

Well might that ancient hill by merit claim
The power and glory of a monarch's name ;
Nurse of pure herbs that grace each holy rite,
Earth's meetest bearer of unyielding might.
The Lord of Life for this ordained him king,
And bade him share the sacred offering.

Gladly obedient to the law divine,
He chose a consort to prolong his line.
No child of earth, born of the Sages' will,
The fair nymph MENĀ pleased the sovran hill.
To her he sued, nor was his prayer denied,
The Saints' beloved was the mountain's bride.
Crowned with all bliss and beauty were the pair,
He passing glorious, she was heavenly fair.
Swiftly the seasons, winged with love, flew on,
And made her mother of a noble son,
The great MAINĀKA, who in triumph led
His Serpent beauties to the bridal bed ;
And once when INDRA'S might those pinions rent
That bare the swift hills through the firmament,
(So fierce his rage, no mountain could withstand
The wild bolt flashing from his red right hand,)

He fled to Ocean, powerful to save,
And hid his glory 'neath the friendly wave.

A gentle daughter came at length to bless
The royal mother with her loveliness ;
Born once again, for in an earlier life
High fame was hers, as ŚIVA'S faithful wife.
But her proud sire had dared the God to scorn ;
Then was her tender soul with anguish torn,
And jealous for the lord she loved so well,
Her angered spirit left its mortal cell.
Now deigned the maid, a lovely boon, to spring
From that pure lady and the mountain-king.
When Industry and Virtue meet and kiss,
Holy their union, and the fruit is bliss.

Blest was that hour, and all the world was gay,
When MENĀ'S daughter saw the light of day.
A rosy glow suffused the brightening sky ;
An odorous breeze came sweeping softly by.
Breathed round the hill a sweet unearthly strain,
And the glad heavens poured down their flowery rain.

That fair young maiden diademmed with light
Made her dear mother's fame more sparkling bright,
As the blue offspring of the Turquois Hills
The parent mount with richer glory fills,
When the cloud's voice has caused the gem to spring,
Responsive to its gentle thundering.

Then was it sweet, as days flew by, to trace
The dawning charm of every infant grace,
Even as the crescent moons their glory pour
More full, more lovely than the eve before.

As yet the maiden was unknown to fame ;
Child of the Mountain was her only name.
But when her mother, filled with anxious care
At her srern penance, cried Forbear ! Forbear !
To a new title was the warning turned,
And UMĀ was the name the maiden earned.

Loveliest was she of all his lovely race,
And dearest to her father. On her face
Looking with love he ne'er could satisfy
The thirsty glances of a parent's eye.
When spring-tide bids a thousand flowerets bloom
Loading the breezes with their rich perfume,
Though here and there the wandering bee may rest,
He loves his own—his darling mango—best.
The Gods' bright river bathes with gold the skies,
And pure sweet eloquence adorns the wise.
The flambeau's glory is the shining fire ;
She was the pride, the glory of her sire,
Shedding new lustre on his old descent,
His loveliest child, his richest ornament.

The sparkling GAṄGĀ laved her heavenly home,
And o'er her islets would the maiden roam
Amid the dear companions of her play
With ball and doll to while the hours away.

As swans in autumn in assembling bands
Fly back to GAṄGĀ'S well-remembered sands :
As herbs beneath the darksome shades of night
Collect again their scattered rays of light :
So dawned upon the maiden's waking mind
The far-off memory of her life resigned,
And all her former learning in its train,
Feelings, and thoughts, and knowledge came again.

Now beauty's prime, that craves no artful aid,
Ripened the loveliness of that young maid :
That needs no wine to fire the captive heart,—
The bow of Love without his flowery dart.
There was a glory beaming from her face,
With love's own light, and every youthful grace :
Ne'er had the painter's skilful hand portrayed
A lovelier picture than that gentle maid ;
Ne'er sun-kissed lily more divinely fair
Unclosed her beauty to the morning air.

Bright as a lotus, springing where she trod,
Her glowing feet shed radiance o'er the sod.
That arching neck, the step, the glance aside,
The proud swans taught her as they stemmed the tide,
Whilst of the maiden they would fondly learn
Her anklets' pleasant music in return.

When the Almighty Maker first began
The marvellous beauty of that child to plan,
In full fair symmetry each rounded limb
Grew neatly fashioned and approved by Him :
The rest was faultless, for the Artist's care
Formed each young charm most excellently fair
As if his moulding hand would fain express
The visible type of perfect loveliness.

What thing of beauty may the poet dare
With the smooth wonder of those limbs compare ?
The young tree springing by the brooklet's side ?
The rounded trunk, the forest-monarch's pride ?
Too rough that trunk, too cold that young tree's stem ;
A softer, warmer thing must vie with them.

Her hidden beauties though no tongue may tell,
Yet ŚIVA'S love will aid the fancy well:
No other maid could deem her boasted charms
Worthy the clasp of such a husband's arms.
Between the partings of fair UMĀ'S vest
Came hasty glimpses of a lovely breast;
So closely there the sweet twin hillocks rose,
Scarce could the lotus in the vale repose.
And if her loosened zone e'er slipped below,
All was so bright beneath the mantle's flow,
So dazzling bright, as if the maid had braced
A band of gems to sparkle round her waist;
And the dear dimples of her downy skin
Seemed fitting couch for love to revel in.
Her arms were softer than the flowery dart,
Young KĀMA'S arrow, that subdues the heart;
For vain his strife with ŚIVA, till at last
He chose those chains to bind his conqueror fast.
E'en the new moon poured down a paler beam
When her long fingers flashed their rosy gleam,
And brighter than Aśoka's blossom threw
A glory round, like summer's evening hue.
The strings of pearl across her bosom thrown
Increased its beauty, and enhanced their own,—
Her breast, her jewels seeming to agree,
The adorner now, and now the adorned to be.
When BEAUTY gazes on the fair full moon,
No lotus charms her, for it blooms at noon:
If on that flower she feed her raptured eye,
No moon is shining from the mid-day sky;
She looked on UMĀ'S face, more heavenly fair,
And found their glories both united there.

The loveliest flower that ever opened yet
Laid in the fairest branch : a fair pearl set
In richest coral, with her smile might vie
Flashing through lips bright with their rosy dye.
And when she spoke, upon the maiden's tongue,
Distilling neatar, such rare accents hung,
The sweetest note that e'er the Koil poured
Seemed harsh and tuneless as a jarring chord.
The melting glance of that soft liquid eye,
Tremulous like lilies when the breezes sigh,
Which learnt it first—so winning and so mild—
The gentle fawn, or MENĀ'S gentler child ?
And oh, the arching of her brow ! so fine
Was the rare beauty of its pencilled line,
Love gazed upon her forehead in despair
And spurned the bow he once esteemed so fair :
Her long bright tresses too might shame the pride
Of envious yaks who roamed the mountain-side,—
Surely the Maker's care had been to bring
From Nature's store each sweetest, loveliest thing,
As if the world's Creator would behold
All beauty centred in a single mould.

When holy NĀRADA—Saint who roams at will—
First saw the daughter of the royal hill,
He hailed the bride whom ŚIVA'S love should own
Half of himself, and partner of his throne.
HIMĀLAYA listened, and the father's pride
Would yield the maiden for no other's bride :
To Fire alone of all bright things we raise
The holy hymn, the sacrifice of praise.
But still the monarch durst not, could not bring
His child, unsought, to Heaven's supremest King ;

But as a good man fears his earnest prayer
Should rise unheeded, and with thoughtful care
Should for some friend his eager suit to aid,
Thus great HIMĀLAYA in his awe delayed.

Since the sad moment when his gentle bride
In the full glory of her beauty died,
The mournful ŚIVA in the holy grove
Had dwelt in solitude, and known not love.
High on that hill where musky breezes throw
Their balmy odours o'er eternal snow ;
Where heavenly minstrels pour their notes divine,
And rippling GAṄGĀ laves the mountain pine,
Clad in a coat of skin all rudely wrought
He lived for prayer and solitary thought.
The faithful band that served the hermit's will Lay in the hollows of the rocky hill,
Where from the clefts the dark bitumen flowed.
Tinted with mineral dyes their bodies glowed ;
Clad in rude mantles of the birch-tree's rind,
With bright red garlands was their hair entwined.
The holy bull before his master's feet
Shook the hard-frozen earth with echoing feet,
And as he heard the lion's roaring swell
In distant thunder from the rocky dell,
In angry pride he raised his voice of fear
And from the mountain drove the startled deer.

Bright fire—a shape the God would sometimes wear
Who takes eight various forms—was glowing there.
Then the great deity who gives the prize
Of penance, prayer, and holy exercise,
As though to earn the meed he grants to man,
Himself the penance and the pain began.

Now to that holy lord, to whom is given
Honour and glory by the Gods in heaven,
The worship of a gift HIMĀLAYA paid,
And towards his dwelling sent the lovely maid ;
Her task, attended by her youthful train,
To woo his widowed heart to love again.

To hermit welcomed with a courteous brow
That gentle enemy of hermit vow.
The still pure breast where Contemplation dwells
Defies the charmer and the charmer's spells.
Calm and unmoved he viewed the wondrous maid,
And bade her all his pious duties aid.
She culled fresh blossoms at the God's command,
Sweeping the altar with a careful hand ;
The holy grass for sacred rites she sought,
And day by day the fairest water brought.
And if the unwonted labour caused a sigh,
The fair-haired lady turned her languid eye
Where the pale moon on ŚIVA'S forehead gleamed.
And swift through all her frame returning vigour streamed.

Canto Second.

THE ADDRESS TO BRAHMĀ.

WHILE impious TĀRAKA in resistless might
Was troubling heaven and earth with wild affright,
To BRAHMĀ'S high abode, by INDRA led,
The mournful deities for refuge fled.
As when the Day-God's loving beams awake
The lotus slumbering on the silver lake,
So BRAHMĀ deigned his glorious face to show,
And poured sweet comfort on their looks of woe.

Then nearer came the suppliant Gods to pay
Honour to him whose face turns every way.
They bowed them low before the Lord of Speech,
And sought with truthful words his heart to reach:
"Glory to Thee! before the world was made,
One single from thy Majesty displayed.
Next Thou, to body forth the mystic Three,
Didst fill three Persons: Glory, Lord, to Thee!
Unborn and unbegotten! from thy hand
The fruitful seed rained down; at thy command
From that small germ o'er quickening waters thrown
All things that move not, all that move have grown.
Before thy triple form in awe they bow:
Maker, preserver, and destroyer, Thou!
Thou, when a longing urged thee to create,
Thy single form in twain didst separate.

The Sire, the Mother that made all things be
By their first union were but parts of Thee.
From them the life that fills this earthly frame,
And fruitful Nature, self-renewing, came.
Thou countest not thy time by mortals' light;
With Thee there is but one vast day and night.
When BRAHMĀ slumbers fainting Nature dies,
When BRAHMĀ wakens all again arise.
Creator of the world, and uncreate!
Endless! all things from Thee their end await.
Before the world wast Thou! each Lord shall fall
Before Thee, mightiest, highest, Lord of all.
Thy self-taught soul thine own deep spirit knows;
Made by thyself thy mighty form arose;
Into the same, when all things have their end,
Shall thy great self, absorbed in Thee, descend.
Lord, who may hope thy essence to declare?
Firm, yet as subtile as the yielding air:
Fixt, all-pervading; ponderous, yet light,
Patent to all, yet hidden from the sight.
Thine are the sacred hymns which mortals raise,
Commencing ever with the word of praise,
With three-toned chant the sacrifice to grace,
And win at last in heaven a blissful place.
They hail Thee Nature labouring to free
The Immortal Soul from low humanity;
Hail Thee the stranger Spirit, unimpressed,
Gazing on Nature from thy lofty rest.
Father of fathers, God of gods art thou,
Creator, highest, hearer of the vow!
Thou art the sacrifice, and Thou the priest,
Thou, he that eateth; Thou, the holy feast.

Thou art the knowledge which by Thee is taught,
The mighty thinker, and the highest thought !"

Pleased with their truthful praise, his favouring eye
He turned upon the dwellers in the sky,
While from four mouths his words in gentle flow
Come welling softly to assuage their woe :
" Welcome ! glad welcome, Princes ! ye who hold
Your lofty sovereignties ordained of old.
But why so mournful ? what has dimmed your light ?
Why shine your faces less divinely bright ?
Like stars that pour forth weaker, paler gleams,
When the fair moon with brighter radiance beams.
O say, in vain doth mighty IRDRA bear
The thunderbolt of heaven, unused to spare ?
VṚTRA, the furious fiend, 'twas strong to slay :
Why dull and blunted is that might to-day ?
See, VARUṆA'S noose hangs idly on his arm,
Like some fell serpent quelled by magic charm.
Weak is KUBERA'S hand, his arm no more
Wields the dread mace it once so proudly bore ;
But like a tree whose boughs are lopped away,
It tells of piercing woe, and dire dismay.
In days of yore how YAMA'S sceptre shone !
Fled are its glories, all its terrors gone ;
Despised and useless as a quenched brand,
All idly now it marks the yielding sand.
Fallen are the Lords of Light, ere now the gaze
Shrank from the coming of their fearful blaze ;
So changed are they, the undazzled eye may see
Like pictured forms, each rayless deity.
Some baffling power has curbed the breezes' swell :
Vainly they chafe against the secret spell.

We know some barrier checks their wonted course,
When refluent waters seek again their source.
The RUDRAS too—fierce demigods who bear
The curved moon hanging from their twisted hair—
Tell by their looks of fear, and shame, and woe,
Of threats now silenced, of a mightier foe.
Glory and power, ye Gods, were yours of right :
Have ye now yielded to some stronger might,
Even as on earth a general law may be
Made powerless by a special text's deeree ?
Then say, my sons, why seek ye BRAHMĀ'S throne ?
'Tis mine to frame the worlds, and yours to guard your own."
Then INDRA turned his thousand glorious eyes,
Glancing like lilies when the soft wind sighs,
And in the Gods' behalf, their mighty chief
Urged the Most Eloquent to tell their grief.
Then rose the heavenly Teacher, by whose side
Dim seemed the glories of the Thousand-eyed,
And with his hands outspread, to BRAHMĀ spake,
Couched on his own dear flower, the daughter of the lake :
" O mighty Being ! surely thou dost know
The unceasing fury of our ruthless foe ;
For thou canst see the secret thoughts that lie
Deep in the heart, yet open to thine eye.
The vengeful TĀRAKA, in resistless might,
Like some dire Comet, gleaming wild affright,
O'er all the worlds an evil influence sheds,
And, in thy favour strong, destruction spreads.
All bow before him : on his palace wall
The sun's first ray and parting splendour fall ;
Ne'er could he waken with a lovelier glance
His own dear lotus from her nightly trance.

For him, proud fiend, the moon no waning knows,
But with unminished full-orbed lustre glows.
Too faint for him the crescent glory set
Amid the blaze of ŚIVA'S coronet.
How fair his garden, where the obedient breeze
Dares steal no blossom from the slumbering trees!
The wild wind checks his blustering pinions there,
And gently whispering fans the balmy air;
While through the inverted year the seasons pour,
To win the demon's grace, their flowery store.
For him, the River-god beneath the stream,
Marks the young pearl increase its silver gleam,
Until, its beauty and its growth complete,
He bears the offering to his master's feet.
The Serpents, led by VĀSUKI, their king,
Across his nightly path their lustre fling;
Bright as a torch their flashing jewels blaze,
Nor wind, nor rain, can dim their dazzling rays.
E'en INDRA, sovereign of the blissful skies,
To gain his love by flattering homage tries,
And sends him oft those flowers of wondrous hue
That on the heavenly tree in beauty grew.
Yet all these offerings brought from day to day,
This flattery, fail his ruthless hand to stay.
Earth, hell, and heaven, beneath his rage must groan,
Till force can hurl him from his evil throne.
Alas! where glowed the bright celestial bowers,
And gentle fair ones nursed the opening flowers,
Where heavenly trees a heavenly odour shed,
O'er a sad desert ruin reigns instead.
He roots up MERU'S sacred peaks, where stray
The fiery coursers of the God of Day,

To form bright slopes, and glittering mounds of ease,
In the broad gardens of his palaces.
There, on his couch, the mighty lord is fanned
To sweetest slumber by a heavenly band;
Poor captive nymphs, who stand in anguish by,
Drop the big tear, and heave the ceaseless sigh.
And now have INDRA'S elephants defiled
The sparkling stream where heavenly GAṄGĀ smiled,
And her gold lotuses the fiend has taken
To deck his pools, and left her all forsaken.
The Gods of heaven no more delight to roam
O'er all the world, far from their glorious home.
They dread the demon's impious might, nor dare
Speed their bright chariots through the fields of air.
And when our worshippers in duty bring
The appointed victims for the offering,
He tears them from the flame with magic art,
While we all powerless watch with drooping heart.
He too has stolen from his master's side
The steed of heavenly race, great INDRA'S pride.
No more our hosts, so glorious once, withstand
The fierce dominion of the demon's hand,
As herbs of healing virtue fail to tame
The sickness raging through the infected frame.
Idly the discus hangs on VIṢṆU'S neck,
And our last hope is vain, that it would check
The haughty TĀRAKA'S might, and flash afar
Ruin and death—the thunderbolt of war.
E'en INDRA'S elephant has felt the might
Of his fierce monsters in the deadly fight,
Which spurn the dust in fury, and defy
The threatening clouds that sail along the sky.

Therefore, O Lord, we seek a chief, that he
May lead the hosts of heaven to victory,
Even as holy men who long to sever
The immortal spirit from its shell for ever,
Seek lovely Virtue's aid to free the soul
From earthly ties and action's base control.
Thus shall he save us: proudly will we go
Under his escort 'gainst the furious foe;
And INDRA, conqueror in turn, shall bring
FORTUNE, dear captive, home with joy and triumphing."
Sweet as the rains—the fresh'ning rains—that pour
On the parched earth when thunders cease to roar,
Were BRAHMĀ'S words: "Gods, I have heard your grief;
Wait ye in patience; time will bring relief.
'Tis not for me, my children, to create
A chief to save you from your mournful fate.
Not by my hand the fiend must be destroyed,
For my kind favour has he once enjoyed;
And well ye know that e'en a poisonous tree
By him who planted it unharmed should be.
He sought it eagerly, and long ago
I gave my favour to your demon-foe,
And stayed his awful penance, that had hurled
Flames, death, and ruin o'er the subject world.
When that great warrior battles for his life,
O, who may conquer in the deadly strife,
Save one of ŚIVA'S seed? He is the light,
Reigning supreme beyond the depths of night.
Nor I, nor VIṢṆU, his full power may share,
Lo, where he dwells in solitude and prayer!
Go, seek the Hermit in the grove alone,
And to the God be UMĀ'S beauty shown.

Perchance, the Mountain-child, with magnet's force,
May turn the iron from its steadfast course,
Bride of the mighty God ; for only she
Can bear to Him as water bears to me.
Then from their love a mighty Child shall rise,
And lead to war the armies of the skies.
Freed by his hand, no more the heavenly maids
Shall twine their glittering hair in mournful braids."
He spake, and vanished from their wondering sight ;
And they sped homeward to their world of light.
But INDRA, still on BRAHMĀ'S words intent,
To KĀMA'S dwelling-place his footsteps bent.
Swiftly he came : the yearning of his will
Made INDRA'S lightning course more speedy still.
The LOVE-GOD, armed with flowers divinely sweet,
In lowly homage bowed before his feet.
Around his neck, where bright love-tokens clung,
Arched like a maiden's brow, his bow was hung,
And blooming SPRING, his constant follower, bore
The manago twig, his weapon famed of yore.

THE DEATH OF LOVE.

IN eager gaze the sovereign of the skies
Looked full on KĀMA with his thousand eyes:
E'en such a gaze as trembling suppliants bend,
When danger threatens, on a mighty friend.

Close by his side, where INDRA bade him rest,
The LOVE-GOD sate, and thus his lord addressed:
"All-knowing INDRA, deign, my Prince, to tell
Thy heart's desire in earth, or heaven, or hell:
Double the favour, mighty sovereign, thou
Hast thought on KĀMA, O, command him now!
Who angers thee by toiling for the prize,
By penance, prayer, or holy sacrifice?
What mortal being dost thou count thy foe?
Speak, I will tame him with my darts and bow.
Has some one feared the endless change of birth,
And sought the path that leads the soul from earth?
Slave to a glancing eye thy foe shall bow,
And own the witchery of a woman's brow;
E'en though the object of thine envious rage
Were taught high wisdom by the immortal sage,
With billowy passions will I whelm his soul,
Like rushing waves that spurn the bank's control.
Or has the ripe full beauty of a spouse,
Too fondly faithful to her bridal vows,

Ravished thy spirit from thee ? Thine, all thine
Around thy neck her loving arms shall twine.
Has thy love, jealous of another's charms,
Spurned thee in wrath when flying to her arms ?
I'll rack her yielding bosom with such pain,
Soon shall she be all love and warmth again,
And wildly fly in fevered haste to rest
Her aching heart close, close to thy dear breast.
Lay, INDRA, lay thy threatening bolt aside :
My gentle darts shall tame the haughtiest pride,
And all that war with heaven and thee shall know
The magic influence of thy KĀMA'S bow ;
For woman's curling lip shall bow them down,
Fainting in terror at her threatening frown.
Flowers are my arms, mine only warrior SPRING,
Yet in thy favour am I strong, great King.
What can their strength who draw the bow avail
Against my matchless power when I assail ?
Strong is the Trident-bearing God, yet he,
The mighty ŚIVA, e'en, must yield to me."

Then INDRA answered with a dawning smile,
Resting his foot upon a stool the while :
"Dear God of Love, thou truly hast displayed
The power unrivalled of thy promised aid.
My hope is all in thee : my weapons are
The thunderbolt and thou, more mighty far.
But vain, all vain the bolt of heaven to fright
Those holy Saints whom penance arms aright.
Thy power exceeds all bound : thou, only thou,
All-conquering Deity, canst help me now !
Full well I know thy nature, and assign
This toil to thee, which needs a strength like thine :

As on that snake alone will KṚṢṆA rest,
That bears the earth upon his haughty crest.
Our task is well-nigh done : thy boasted dart
Has power to conquer even ŚIVA'S heart.
Hear what the Gods, oppressed with woe, would fain
From mighty SIVA through thine aid obtain.
He may beget—and none in heaven but he—
A chief to lead our hosts to victory.
But all his mind with holiest lore is fraught,
Bent on the Godhead is his every thought.
Thy darts, O LOVE, alone can reach him now,
And lure his spirit from the hermit vow.
Go, seek HIMĀLAYA'S Mountain-child, and aid
With all thy loveliest charms the lovely maid,
So may she please his fancy : only she
May wed with ŚIVA : such the fixt decree.
E'en now my bands of heavenly maids have spied
Fair UMĀ dwelling by the Hermit's side.
There by her father's bidding rests she still,
Sweet minister, upon the cold bleak hill.
Go, KĀMA, go ! perform this great emprise,
And free from fear the Rulers of the Skies ;
We need thy fovour, as the new-sown grain
Calls for the infiuence of the gentle rain.
Go, KĀMA, go ! thy flowery darts shall be
Crowned with success o'er this great deity.
Yea, and thy task is e'en already done,
For praise and glory are that instant won
When a bold heart dares manfully essay
The deed which others shrink from the dismay.
Gods are thy suppliants, KĀMA, and on thee
Depends the triple world's security.

No cruel deed will stain thy flowery bow :
With all thy gentlest, mightiest valour, go !
And now, Disturber of the spirit, see
SPRING, thy beloved, will thy comrade be,
And gladly aid thee ŚIVA'S heart to tame :
None bids the whispering Wind, and yet he fans the flame."
He spake, and KĀMA bowed his bright head down,
And took his bidding like a flowery crown.
And fondly touched his soldier ere he went,
With that hard hand—but, O, how gentle now !—
That fell so heavy his elephant's brow.
Then for that snow-crowned hill he turned away,
Where all alone the heavenly Hermit lay.
His fearful RATI and his comrade SPRING
Followed the guidance of Love's mighty king.
There will he battle in unwonted strife,
Return a conqueror or be reft of life.
How fair was SPRING ! To fill the heart with love,
And lure the Hermit from his thoughts above,
In that pure grove he grew so heavenly bright
That KĀMA'S envy wakened at the sight.
Now the bright Day-God turned his burning ray
To where KUBERA holds his royal sway,
While the sad South in whispering breezes sighed
And mourned his absence like a tearful bride.
Then from its stem the red Aśoka threw
Full buds and flowerets of celestial hue,
Nor waited for the maiden's touch, the sweet
Beloved pressure of her tinkling feet.
There grew LOVE'S arrow, his dear mango spray,
Winged with young leaves to speed its airy way,

And at the call of SPRING the wild bees came,
Grouping the syllables of KĀMA'S name.
How sighed the spirit o'er that loveliest flower
That boasts no fragrance to enrich its dower !
For Nature, wisest mother, oft prefers
To part more fairly those good gifts of hers.
There from the tree Palāśa blossoms spread,
Curved like the crescent moon, their rosiest red,
With opening buds that looked as if young SPRING
Had pressed his nails there in his dallying :
Sweet wanton SPRING, to whose enchanting face
His flowery Tilaka gave fairer grace :
Who loves to tint his lip, the mango spray,
With the fresh colours of the early day,
And powder its fine red with many a bee
That sips the oozing nectar rapturously.
The cool gale speeding o'er the shady lawns
Shook down the sounding leaves, while startled fawns
Ran wildly at the viewless foe, all blind
With pollen wafted by the fragrant wind.
Sweet was the Köil's voice, his neck still red
With mango buds on which he late had fed ;
'Twas as the voice of LOVE to bid the dame
Spurn her cold pride, nor quench the gentle flame.
What though the heat has stained the tints that dyed
With marvellous bloom the heavenly minstrel's bride ?
Neither her smile nor sunny glances fail :
Bright is her lip, although her check be pale.
E'en the pure hermits owned the secret power
Of warm SPRING coming in unwonted hour,
While LOVE'S delightful witchery gently stole
With strong sweet influence o'er the saintly soul.

On came the Archer-God, and at his side
The timid RATI, his own darling bride,
While breathing nature showed how deep it felt,
At passion's glowing touch, the senses melt.
For there is eager love the wild bee dipp'd
In the dark flower-cup where his partner sipp'd.
Here in the shade the hart his horn declined,
And, while joy closed her eyes, caressed the hind.
There from her trunk the elephant had poured
A lily-scented stream to cool her lord,
While the fond love-bird by the silver flood
Gave to his mate the tasted lotus bud.
Full in his song the minstrel stayed to sip
The heavenlier nectar of his darling's lip.
Pure pearls of heat had late distained the dye,
But flowery wine was sparkling in her eye.
How the young creeper's beauty charmed the view,
Fair as the fairest maid, as playful too !
Here some bright blossoms, lovelier than the rest,
In full round beauty matched her swelling breast.
Here in a thin bright line, some delicate spray,
Red as her lip, ravished the soul away.
And then how loving, and how close they clung
To the tall trees that fondly o'er them hung !
Bright, heavenly wantons poured the witching strain,
Quiring for SIVA'S ear, but all in vain.
No charmer's spell may check the firm control
Won by the holy o'er the impassioned soul.

The Hermit's servant hasted to the door :
In his left hand a branch of gold he bore.
He touched his lip for silence : " Peace ! be still !
Nor mar the quiet of this holy hill."

He spake : no dweller of the forest stirred,
No wild bee murmured, hushed was every bird.
Still and unmoved, as in a picture stood
All life that breathed within the waving wood.

As some great monarch when he goes to war
Shuns the fierce aspect of a baleful star,
So KĀMA hid him from the Hermit's eye,
And sought a path that led unnoticed by,
Where tangled flowers and clustering trailers spread
Their grateful canopy o'er ŚIVA'S head.
Bent on his hardy enterprise, with awe
The Three-eyed Lord—great Penitent—he saw.
There sate the God beneath a pine-tree's shade,
Where on a mound a tiger's skin was laid.
Absorbed in holiest thought, erect and still,
The Hermit rested on the gentle hill.
His shoulders drooping down, each foot was bent
Beneath the body of the Penitent.
With open palms the hands were firmly pressed,
As though a lotus lay upon his breast.
A double rosary in each ear, behind
With wreathing serpents were his locks entwined.
His coat of hide shone blacker to the view
Against his neck of brightly beaming blue.
How wild the look, how terrible the frown
Of his dark eyebrows bending sternly down !
How fiercely glared his eyes' unmoving blaze
Fixed in devotion's meditating gaze !
Calm as a full cloud resting on a hill,
A waveless lake when every breeze is still,
Like a torch burning in a sheltered spot,
So still was He, unmoving, breathing not.

So full the stream of marvellous glory poured
From the bright forehead of that mighty Lord,
Pale seemed the cresent moon upon his head,
And slenderer than a slender lotus thread.
At all the body's nine-fold gates of sense
He had barred in the pure Intelligence,
To ponder on the Soul which sages call
Eternal Spirit, highest, over all.

How sad was KĀMA at the awful sight,
How failed his courage in a swoon of fright !
As near and nearer to the God he came
Whom wildest thought could never hope to tame,
Unconsciously his hands, in fear and woe,
Dropped the sweet arrows and his flowery bow.

But UMĀ came with all her maiden throng,
And KĀMA'S fainting heart again was strong ;
Bright flowers of spring, in every lovely hue,
Around the lady's form rare beauty threw.
Some clasped her neck like strings of purest pearls,
Some shot their glory through her wavy curls.
Bending her graceful head as half-oppressed
With swelling charms even too richly blest,
Fancy might deem that beautiful young maiden
Some slender tree with its sweet flowers o'erladen.
From time to time her gentle hand replaced
The flowery girdle slipping from her waist :
It seemed that LOVE could find no place more fair,
So hung his newest, dearest bowstring there.
A greedy bee kept hovering round to sip
The fragrant nectar of her blooming lip.
She closed her eyes in terror of the thief,
And beat him from her with a lotus leaf.

The angry curl of RATI'S lip confessed
The shade of envy that stole o'er her breast.
Through KĀMA'S soul fresh hope and courage flew,
As that sweet vision blessed his eager view.
So bright, so fair, so winning soft was she,
Who could not conquer in such company ?
    Now UMĀ came, fair maid, his destined bride,
With timid steps approching ŚIVA'S side.
In contemplation will he brood no more,
He sees the Godhead, and his task is o'er.
He breathes, he moves, the earth begins to rock,
The Snake, her bearer, trembling at the shock.
    Due homage then his own dear servant paid,
And told him of the coming of the maid.
He learnt his Master's pleasure by the nod,
And led HIMĀLAYA'S daughter to the God.
Before his feet her young companions spread
Fresh leaves and blossoms as they bowed the head,
While UMĀ stooped so low, that from her hair
Dropped the bright flower that starred the midnight there.
To him whose ensign bears the bull she bent,
Till each spray fell, her ear's rich ornament.
"Sweet maid," cried ŚIVA, "surely thou shalt be Blessed with a husband who loves none but thee !"
    Her fear was banished, and her hope was high :
A God had spoken, and Gods cannot lie.
    Rash as some giddy moth that wooes the flame,
LOVE seized the moment, and prepared to aim.
Close by the daughter of the Mountain-King,
He looked on ŚIVA, and he eyed his string.
    While with her radiant hand fair UMĀ gave
A rosary, of the lotuses that lave

Their beauties in the heavenly GAṄGĀ'S wave,
And the great Three-Eyed God was fain to take
The offering for the well-loved suppliant's sake,
On his bright bow LOVE placed the unerring dart,
The soft beguiler of the stricken heart.

Like the Moon's influence on the sea at rest,
Came passion stealing o'er the Hermit's breast,
While on the maiden's lip that mocked the dye
Of ripe red fruit, he bent his melting eye.
And oh ! how showed the lady's love for him,
The heaving bosom, and each quivering limb !
Like young Kadambas, when the leaf-buds swell,
At the warm touch of Spring they love so well.
But still, with downcast eyes, she sought the ground,
And durst not turn their burning glances round.

Then with strong effort, ŚIVA lulled to rest,
The storm of passion in his troubled breast,
And seeks, with angry eyes that round him roll,
Whence came the tempest o'er his tranquil soul.
He looked, and saw the bold young archer stand,
His bow bent ready in his skilful hand,
Drawn towards the eye ; his shoulder well depressed,
And the left foot thrown forward as a rest.

Then was the Hermit-God to madness lashed,
Then from his eye red flames of fury flashed.
So changed the beauty of that glorious brow,
Scarce could the gaze support its terror now.

Hark ! heavenly voices sighing through the air :
"Be calm, great ŚIVA, O be calm and spare !"
Alas ! that angry eye's resistless flashes
Have scorched the gentle King of Love to ashes !

But RATI saw not, for she swooned away ;
Senseless and breathless on the earth she lay ;
Sleep while thou mayst, unconscious lady, sleep !
Soon wilt thou rise to sigh and wake to weep.

E'en as the red bolt rives the leafy bough,
So ŚIVA smote the hinderer of his vow ;
Then fled with all his train to some lone place
Far from the witchery of a female face.

Sad was HIMÁLAYA'S daughter : grief and shame
O'er the young spirit of the maiden came :
Grief—for she loved, and all her love was vain ;
Shame—she was spurned before her youthful train.
She turned away, with fear and woe oppressed,
To hide her sorrow on her father's breast ;
Then, in the fond arms of her pitying sire,
Closed her sad eyes for fear of ŚIVA'S ire.
Still in his grasp the weary maiden lay,
While he sped swiftly on his homeward way.

Thus have I seen the elephant stoop to drink,
And lift a lily from the fountain's brink.
Thus, when he rears his mighty head on high,
Across his tusks I've seen that lily lie.

* CANTO FOURTH *

Canto Fourth.

RATI'S LAMENT.

SAD, solitary, helpless, faint, forlorn,
Woke KĀMA'S darling from her swoon to mourn.
Too soon her gentle soul returned to know
The pangs of widowhood—that word of woe.
Scarce could she raise her, trembling, from the ground,
Scarce dared to bend her anxious gaze around,
Unconscious yet those greedy eyes should never
Feed on his beauty more—gone, gone for ever.
"Speak to me, KĀMA ! why so silent ? give
One word in answer—doth my KĀMA live ?"
There on the turf his dumb cold ashes lay,
Whose soul that fiery flash had scorched away.
She clasped the dank earth in her wild despair,
Her bosom stained, and rent her long bright hair,
Till hill and valley caught the mourner's cry,
And pitying breezes echoed sigh for sigh.
"Oh thou wast beautiful : fond lovers sware
Their own bright darlings were like KĀMA, fair.
Sure woman's heart is stony : can it be
That I still live while this is all of thee ?
Where art thou, KĀMA ? Could my dearest leave
His own fond RATI here alone to grieve ?
So must the sad forsaken lotus die
When her bright river leaves his channel dry.

KĀMA, dear KĀMA, call again to mind
How thou wast ever gentle, I was kind.
Let not my prayer, thy RATI'S prayer, be vain ;
Come as of old, and bless these eyes again !
Wilt thou not hear me ? Think of those sweet hours
When I would bind thee with my zone of flowers,
Those soft gay fetters o'er thee fondly wreathing,
Thine only punishment when gently breathing
In tones of love thy heedless sigh betrayed
The name, dear traitor ! of some rival maid.
Then would I pluck a floweret from my tress
And beat thee till I forced thee to confess,
While in my play the falling leaves would cover
The eyes—the bright eyes—of my captive lover.
And then those words that made me, oh, so blest—
"Dear love, thy home is in my faithful breast !"
Alas, sweet words, too blissful to be true,
Or how couldst thou have died, nor RATI perish too ?
Yes, I will fly to thee, of thee bereft,
And leave this world which thou, my life, hast left.
Cold, gloomy, now this wretched world must be,
For all its pleasures came from only thee.
When night has veiled the city in its shade,
Thou, only thou, canst soothe the wandering maid,
And guide her trembling at the thunder's roar
Safe through the darkness to her lover's door.
In vain the wine-cup, as it circles by,
Lisps in her tongue and sparkles in her eye.
Long locks are streaming, and the cheek glows red :
But all is mockery, LOVE—dear LOVE—is dead.
The MOON, sweet spirit, shall lament for thee,
Late, dim, and joyless shall his rising be.

Days shall fly on, and he forget to take
His full bright glory, mourning for thy sake.
Say, KĀMA, say, whose arrow now shall be
The soft green shoot of thy dear mango tree,
The favourite spray which Köils love so well,
And praise in sweetest strain its wondrous spell ?
This line of bees which strings thy useless bow
Hums mournful echo to my cries of woe.
Come in thy lovely shape and teach again
The Köil's mate, that knows the tender strain,
Her gentle task to waft to longing ears
The lover's hope, the distant lover's fears.
Come, bring once more that ecstasy of bliss,
The fond dear look, the smile, and ah ! that kiss !
Fainting with woe, my soul refuses rest
When memory pictures how I have been blest.
See, thou didst weave a garland, love, to deck
With all spring's fairest buds thy RATI'S neck.
Sweet are those flowers as they were culled to-day,
And is my KĀMA'S form more frail than they ?
His pleasant task my lover had begun,
But stern Gods took him ere the work was done ;
Return, my KĀMA, at thy RATI'S cry,
And stain this foot which waits the rosy dye.
    Now will I hie me to the fatal pile,
And ere heaven's maids have hailed thee with a smile,
Or on my love their winning glances thrown,
I will be there, and claim thee for mine own.
Yet though I come, my lasting shame will be
That I have lived one moment after thee.
Ah, how shall I thy funeral rites prepare,
Gone soul and body to the viewless air ?

With thy dear SPRING I've seen thee talk and smile,
Shaping an arrow for thy bow the while.
Where is he now, thy darling friend, the giver
Of many a bright sweet arrow for thy quiver ?
Is he too sent upon death's dreary path,
Scorched by the cruel God's inexorable wrath ?"

Stricken in spirit by her cries of woe,
Like venomed arrows from a mighty bow,
A moment fled, and gentle SPRING was there,
To ask her grief, to soothe her wild despair.
She beat her breast more wildly than before,
With greater floods her weeping eyes ran o'er.
When friends are nigh the spirit finds relief
In the full gushing torrent of its grief.

" Turn, gentle friend, thy weeping eyes, and see
That dear companion who was all to me.
His crumbling dust with which the breezes play,
Bearing it idly in their course away,
White as the silver feathers of a dove.
Is all that's left me of my murdered love.

Now come, my KĀMA. SPRING, who was so dear,
Longs to behold thee. Oh, appear, appear !
Fickle to women LOVE perchance may bend
His ear to listen to a faithful friend.
Remember, he walked ever at thy side
O'er bloomy meadows in the warm spring-tide,
That Gods above, and men, and fiends below
Should own the empire of thy mighty bow,
That ruthless bow, which pierces to the heart,
Strung with a lotus-thread, a flower its dart.

As dies a torch when winds sweep roughly by,
So is my light for ever fled, and I,
The lamp his cheering rays no more illume,
Am wrapt in darkness, misery and gloom.
Fate took my love, and spared the widow's breath,
Yet fate is guilty of a double death.
When the wild monster tramples on the ground
The tree some creeper garlands closely round,
Reft of the guardian which it thought so true,
Forlorn and withered, it must perish too.
Then come, dear friend, the true one's pile prepare,
And send me quickly to my husband there,
Call it not vain : the mourning lotus dies
When the bright MOON, her lover, quits the skies.
When sinks the red cloud in the purple west,
Still clings his bride, the lightning, to his breast.
All nature keeps the eternal high decree :
Shall woman fail ? I come, my love, to thee !

Now on the pile my faint limbs will I throw,
Clasping his ashes, lovely even so,—
As if beneath my weary frame were spread
Soft leaves and blossoms for a flowery bed.
And oh, dear comrade (for in happier hours
Oft have I heaped a pleasant bed of flowers
For thee and him beneath the spreading tree),
Now quickly raise the pile for LOVE and me.
And in thy mercy gentle breezes send
To fan the flame that wafts away thy friend,
And shorten the sad moments that divide
Impatient KAMA from his RATI'S side ;
Set water near us in a single urn,
We'll sip in heaven from the same in turn ;

And let thine offering to his spirit be
Sprays fresh and lovely from the mango tree,
Culled when the round young buds begin to swell,
For KĀMA loved those fragrant blossoms well."
As RATI thus complained in faithful love,
A heavenly voice breathed round her from above,
Falling in pity like the gentle rain
That brings the dying herbs to life again :
"Bride of the flower-armed God, thy lord shall be
Not ever distant, ever deaf to thee.
Give me thine ear, sad lady, I will tell
Why perished KĀMA, whom thou lovedst well.
The Lord of Life in every troubled sense
Too warmly felt his fair child's influence.
He quenched the fire, but mighty vengeance came
On KĀMA, fanner of the unholy flame.
When ŚIVA by her penance won has led
HIMĀLAYA'S daughter to her bridal bed,
His bliss to KĀMA shall the God repay,
And give again the form he snatched away.
Thus did the gracious God, at JUSTICE' prayer,
The term of LOVE'S sad punishment declare.
The Gods, like clouds, are fierce and gentle too.
Now hurl the bolt, now drop sweet heavenly dew.
Live, widowed lady, for thy lover's arms
Shall clasp again—oh, fondly clasp—thy charms.
In summer-heat the streamlet dies away
Beneath the fury of the God of Day :
Then, in due season, comes the pleasant rain,
And all is fresh, and fair, and full again."
Thus breathed the spirit from the viewless air,
And stilled the raging of her wild despair ;

While SPRING consoled with every soothing art,
Cheered by that voice from heaven, the mourner's heart,
Who watched away the hours, so sad and slow,
That brought the limit of her weary woe,
As the pale moon, quenched by the conquering light
Of garish day, longs for its own dear night.

* CANTO FIFTH *

Canto Fifth.

UMĀ'S REWARD.

Now woe to UMĀ, for young LOVE is slain,
Her Lord hath left her, and her hope is vain.
Woe, woe to UMĀ ! how the Mountain-Maid
Cursed her bright beauty for its feeble aid !
'Tis Beauty's guerdon which she loves the best,
To bless her lover, and in turn be blest.

Penance must aid her now—or how can she
Win the cold heart of that stern deity ?
Penance, long penance : for that power alone
Can make such love, so high a Lord, her own.

But, ah ! how troubled was her mother's brow
At the sad tidings of the mourner's vow !
She threw her arms around her own dear maid,
Kissed, fondly kissed her, sighed, and wept, and prayed :

" Are there no Gods, my child, to love thee here ?
Frail is thy body, yet thy vow severe.
The lily, by the wild bee scarcely stirred,
Bends, breaks, and dies beneath the weary bird."

Fast fell her tears, her prayer was strong, but still
That prayer was weaker than her daughter's will.
Who can recall the torrent's headlong force,
Or the bold spirit in its destined course ?

She sent a maiden to her sire, and prayed
He for her sake would grant some bosky shade,

That she might dwell in solitude, and there
Give all her soul to penance and to prayer.
In gracious love the great HIMĀLAYA smiled,
And did the bidding of his darling child.
Then to that hill which peacocks love she came,
Known to all ages by the lady's name.

Still to her purpose resolutely true,
Her string of noble pearls aside she threw,
Which, slipping here and there, had rubbed away
The sandal dust that on her bosom lay,
And clad her in a hermit coat of bark,
Rough to her gentle limbs, and gloomy dark,
Pressing too tightly, till her swelling breast
Broke into freedom through the unwonted vest.
Her matted hair was full as lovely now
As when 'twas braided o'er her polished brow,
Thus the sweet beauties of the lotus shine
When bees festoon it in a graceful line;
And, though the tangled weeds that crown the rill
Cling o'er it closely, it is lovely still.
With zone of grass the votaress was bound,
Which reddened the fair form it girdled round:
Never before the lady's waist had felt
The ceaseless torment of so rough a belt.

Alas! her weary vow has caused to fade
The lovely colours that adorned the maid.
Pale is her hand, and her long finger tips
Steal no more splendour from her paler lips,
Or, from the ball which in her play would rest,
Made bright and fragrant, on her perfumed breast.
Rough with the sacred grass those hands must be,
And worn with resting on her rosary.

Cold earth her couch, her canopy the skies,
Pillowed upon her arm the lady lies :
She who before was wont to rest her head
In the soft luxury of a sumptuous bed,
Vext by no troubles as she slumbered there,
But sweet flowers slipping from her loosened hair.
The maid put off, but only for awhile,
Her passioned glances and her witching smile.
She lent the fawn her moving, melting gaze,
And the fond creeper all her winning ways.
The trees that blossomed on that lonely mount
She watered daily from the neighbouring fount :
If she had been their nursing mother, she
Could not have tended them more carefully,
Not e'en her boy—her own bright boy—shall stay
Her love for them : her first dear children they.
Her gentleness had made the fawns so tame,
To her kind hand for fresh sweet grain they came,
And let the maid before her friends compare
Her own with eyes that stone as softly there.
Then came the hermits of the holy wood
To see the votaress in her solitude ;
Grey elders came ; though young the maid might seem,
Her perfect virtue must command esteem.
They found her resting in that lonely spot,
The fire was kindled. and no rite forgot.
In hermit's mantle was she clad ; her look
Fixt in deep thought upon the Holy Book.
So pure that grove : all war was made to cease,
And savage monsters lived in love and peace.
Pure was that grove : each newly built abode
Had leafy shrines where fires of worship glowed.

But far too mild her penance, UMĀ thought,
To win from heaven the lordly meed she sought.
She would not spare her form, so fair and frail,
If sterner penance could perchance prevail.
Oft had sweet pastime wearied her, and yet
Fain would she match in toil the anchoret.
Sure the soft lotus at her birth had lent
Dear UMĀ'S form its gentle element;
But gold, commingled with her being, gave
That will so strong, so beautifully brave.

Full in the centre of four blazing piles
Sate the fair lady of the winning smiles,
While on her head the mighty God of Day
Shot all the fury of his summer ray;
Yet her fixt gaze she turned upon the skies,
And quenched his splendour with her brighter eyes.
To that sweet face, though scorched by rays from heaven,
Still was the beauty of the lotus given,
Yet, worn by watching, round those orbs of light
A blackness gathered like the shades of night.
She cooled her dry lips in the bubbing stream,
And lived on Amrit from the pale moon-beam,
Sometimes in hunger culling from the tree
The rich ripe fruit that hung so temptingly.

Scorched by the fury of the noon-tide rays,
And fires that round her burned with ceaseless blaze,
Summer passed o'er her: rains of Autumn came
And throughly drenched the lady's tender frame.
So steams the earth, when mighty torrents pour
On thirsty fields all dry and parched before.
The first clear rain-drops falling on her brow,
Gem it one moment with their light, and now

Kissing her sweet lip find a welcome rest
In the deep valley of the lady's breast;
Then wander broken by the fall within
The mazy channels of her dimpled skin.
There as she lay upon her rocky bed,
No sumptuous roof above her gentle head,
Dark Night, her only witness, turned her eyes,
Red lightnings flashings from the angry skies,
And gazed upon her voluntary pain,
In wind, in sleet, in thunder, and in rain.
Still lay the maiden on the cold damp ground'
Though blasts of winter hurled their snows around,
Still pitying in her heart the mournful fate
Of those poor birds, so fond, so desolate,—
Doomed, hapless pair, to list each other's moan
Through the long hours of night, sad and alone.

Chilled by the rain, the tender lotus sank:
She filled its place upon the streamlet's bank.
Sweet was her breath as when that lovely flower
Sheds its best odour in still evening's hour.
Red as its leaves her lips of coral hue:
Red as those quivering leaves they quivered too.

Of all stern penance it is called the chief
To nourish life upon the fallen leaf.
But even this the ascetic maiden spurned,
And for all time a glorious title earned.
APARNĀ—Lady of the unbroken fast—
Have sages called her, saints who knew the past.
Fair as the lotus fibres, soft as they,
In these stern vows she passed her night and day.
No mighty anchoret had e'er essayed
The ceaseless penance of this gentle maid.

There came a hermit ; reverend was he
As Brāhmanhood's embodied sanctity,
With coat of skin, with staff and matted hair,
His face was radiant, and he spake her fair.
Up rose the maid the holy man to greet,
And humbly bowed before the hermit's feet.
Though meditation fill the pious breast,
It finds a welcome for a glorious guest :
The sage received the honour duly paid,
And fixed his earnest gaze upon the maid.
While through her frame unwonted vigour ran,
Thus, in his silver speech, the blameless saint began :
"How can thy tender frame, sweet lady, bear
In thy firm spirit's task its fearful share ?
Canst thou the grass and fuel duly bring,
And still unwearied seek the freshening spring ?
Say, do the creeper's slender shoots expand,
Seeking each day fresh water from thy hand,
Till like thy lip each ruddy tendril glows,
That lip which, faded, still outreds the rose ?
With loving glance the timid fawns draw nigh :
Say dost thou still with joy their wants supply ?
For thee, O lotus-eyed, their glances shine,
Mocking the brightness of each look of thine,
O Mountain-Lady, it is truly said
That heavenly charms to sin have never led,
For even penitents may learn of thee
How pure, how gentle Beauty's self may be.
Bright GAṄGĀ falling with her heavenly waves,
HIMĀLAYA'S head with sacred water laves,
Bearing the flowers the seven great Sages fling
To crown the forehead of the Mountain-King.

Yet do thy deeds, O bright-haired maiden, shed
A richer glory round his awful head.
Purest of motives, Duty leads thy heart :
Pleasure and gain therein may claim no part.
O noble maid, the wise have truly said
That friendship soon in gentle heart is bred.
Seven steps together bind the lasting tie :
Then bend on me, dear Saint, a gracious eye.
Fain, lovely UMĀ, would a Brāhmaṇa learn
What noble guerdon would thy penance earn.
Say, art thou toiling for a second birth,
Where dwells the great Creator ? O'er the earth
Resistless sway ? Or fair as Beauty's Queen,
Peerless, immortal, shall thy form be seen ?
The lonely soul bowed down by grief and pain,
By penance' aid some gracious boon may gain.
But what, O faultless one, can move thy heart
To dwell in solitude and prayer apart ?
Why should the cloud of grief obscure thy brow,
'Mid all thy kindred, who so loved as thou ?
Foes hast thou none : for what rash hand would dare
From serpent's head the magic gem to tear ?
Why dost thou seek the hermit's garb to try,
Thy silken raiment and thy gems thrown by ?
As though the sun his glorious state should leave,
Rayless to harbour 'mid the shades of eve.
Wouldst thou win heaven by thy holy spells ?
Already with the Gods thy father dwells.
A husband, lady ? O forbear the thought,
A priceless jewel seeks not, but is sought.
Maiden, thy deep sighs tell me it is so ;
Yet, doubtful still, my spirit seeks to know

Couldst thou e'er love in vain ? What heart so cold
That hath not eagerly its worship told ?
Ah ! could the cruel loved one, thou fair maid,
Look with cold glances on that bright hair's braid ?
Thy locks are hanging loosely o'er thy brow,
Thine ear is shaded by no lotus now.
See, where the sun hath scorched that tender neck
Which precious jewels once were proud to deck.
Still gleams the line where they were wont to cling,
As faintly shows the moon's o'ershadowed ring.
Now sure thy loved one, vain in beauty's pride,
Dreamed of himself when wandering at thy side,
Or he would count him blest to be the mark
Of that dear eye, so soft, so lustrous dark.
But, gentle UMĀ, let thy labour cease ;
Turn to thy home, fair Saint, and rest in peace.
By many a year of penance duly done
Rich store of merit has my labour won.
Take then the half, thy secret purpose name ;
Nor in stern hardships wear thy tender frame."

The holy Brāhmaṇa ceased : but UMĀ'S breast
In silence heaved, by love and fear opprest.
In mute appeal she turned her languid eye,
Darkened with weeping, not with softening dye,
To bid her maiden's friendly tongue declare
The cherished secret of her deep despair :
"Hear, holy Father, if thou still wouldst know,
Why her frail form endures this pain and woe,
As the soft lotus makes a screen to stay
The noontide fury of the God of Day.

Proudly disdaining all the blest above,
With heart and soul she seeks for ŚIVA'S love.
For him alone, the Trident-wielding God,
The thorny paths of penance hath she trod.
But since that mighty one hath KĀMA slain,
Vain every hope, and every effort vain.
E'en as life fled, a keen but flowery dart
Young LOVE, the Archer, aimed at ŚIVA'S heart.
The God in anger hurled the shaft away,
But deep in UMĀ'S tender soul it lay ;
Alas, poor maid ! she knows no comfort now,
Her soul's on fire, her wild locks hide her brow.
She quits her father's halls, and frenzied roves
The icy mountain and the lonely groves.
Oft as the maidens of the minstrel throng
To hymn great SIVA'S praises raised the song,
The lovelorn lady's sobs and deep-drawn sighs
Drew tears of pity from their gentle eyes.
Wakeful and fevered in the dreary night
Scarce closed her eyes, and then in wild affright
Rang through the halls her very bitter cry,
"God of the azure neck, why dost thou fly ?"
While their soft bands her loving arms would cast
Round the dear vision fading all too fast.
Her skilful hand, with true love-guided art,
Had traced the image graven on her heart.
"Art thou all present ? Dost thou fail to see Poor UMĀ'S anguish and her love for thee ?"
Thus oft in frenzied grief her voice was heard,
Chiding the portrait with reproachful word.
Long thus in vain for ŚIVA'S love she strove,
Then turned in sorrow to this holy grove.

Since the sad maid hath sought these forest glades
To hide her grief amid the dreary shades,
The fruit hath ripened on the spreading bough ;
But ah ! no fruit hath crowned her holy vow.
Her faithful friends alone must ever mourn
To see that beauteous form by penance worn,
But oh ! that ŚIVA would some favour deign,
As INDRA pitieth the parching plain !"

The maiden ceased : his secret joy dissembling,
The Brāhmaṇa turned to UMĀ pale and trembling :
"And is it thus, or doth the maiden jest ?
Is this the darling secret of thy breast ?"

Scarce could the maid her choking voice command,
or clasp her rosary with quivering hand :
"O holy sage, learned in the Vedas' lore,
'Tis even thus. Great ŚIVA I adore.
Thus would my steadfast heart his love obtain,
For this I gladly bear the toil and pain.
Surely the strong desire, the earnest will,
May win some favour from his mercy still."

"Lady," cried he, "that mighty Lord I know ;
Ever his presence bringeth care and woe.
And wouldst thou still a second time prepare
The sorrows of his fearful life to share ?
Deluded maid, how shall thy tender hand,
Decked with the nuptial bracelet's jewelled band,
Be clasped in his, when fearful serpents twine
In scaly horror round that arm divine ?
How shall thy robe, with gay flamingoes gleaming,
Suit with his coat of hide with blood-drops streaming ?
Of old thy pathway led where flowerets sweet
Made pleasant carpets for thy gentle feet.

And e'en thy foes would turn in grief away
To see these vermeil-tinted limbs essay,
Where scattered tresses strew the mournful place,
Their gloomy path amid the tombs to trace.
On ŚIVA'S heart the funeral ashes rest,
Say, gentle lady, shall they stain thy breast,
Where the rich tribute of the Sandal trees
Sheds a pure odour on the amorous breeze ?
A royal bride returning in thy state,
The king of elephants should bear thy weight.
How wilt thou brook the mockery and the scorn
When thou on ŚIVA'S bull art meanly borne ?
Sad that the crescent moon his crest should be :
And shall that mournful fate be shared by thee ?
His crest, the glory of the evening skies,
His bride, the moonlight of our wondering eyes !
Deformed is he, his ancestry unknown ;
By vilest garb his poverty is shown.
O fawn-eyed lady, how should ŚIVA gain
That heart for which the glorious strive in vain.
No charms hath he to win a maiden's eye :
Cease from thy penance, hush the fruitless sigh !
unmeet is he thy faithful heart to share,
Child of the Mountain, maid of beauty rare !
Not 'mid the gloomy tombs do sages raise
The holy altar of their prayer and praise."

Impatient UMĀ listened : the quick blood
Rushed to her temples in an angry flood.
Her quivering lip, her darkly-flashing eye
Told that the tempest of her wrath was nigh.
Proudly she spoke : "How couldst thou tell aright
Of one like ŚIVA, perfect, infinite ?

'Tis ever thus, the mighty and the just
Are scorned by souls that grovel in the dust.
Their lofty goodness and their motives wise
Shine all in vain before such blinded eyes,
Say who is greater, he who strives for power,
Or he who succours in misfortune's hour ?
Refuge of worlds, O how should ŚIVA deign
To look on men enslaved to paltry gain ?
The spring of wealth himself, he careth naught
For the vile treasures that mankind have sought.
His dwelling-place amid the tombs may be,
Yet Monarch of the three great worlds is he.
What though no love his outward form may claim,
The stout heart trembles at his awful name.
Who can declare the wonders of his might ?
The Trident-wielding God, who knows aright ?
Whether around him deadly serpents twine,
Or if his jewelled wreaths more brightly shine ;
Whether in rough and wrinkled hide arrayed,
Or silken robe, in glittering folds displayed ;
If on his brow the crescent moon he bear,
Or if a shrunken skull be withering there ;
The funeral ashes touched by him acquire
The glowing lustre of eternal fire ;
Falling in golden showers, the heavenly maids
Delight to pour them on their shining braids.
What though no treasures fill his storehouse full,
What though he ride upon his horned bull,
Not e'en may INDRA in his pride withhold
The lowly homage that is his of old,
But turns his raging elephant to meet
His mighty lord, and bows before his feet,

Right proud to colour them rich rosy red
With the bright flowers that deck his prostrate head.
Thy slanderous tongue proclaims thy evil mind,
Yet in thy speech one word of truth we find.
Unknown thou calls't him : how should mortal man
Count when the days of BRAHMĀ'S Lord began ?
But cease these idle words : though all be true,
His failings many and his virtues few,
Still clings my heart to him, its chosen lord,
Nor fails nor falters at thy treacherous word.
Dear maiden, bid yon eager boy depart ;
Why should the slanderous tale defile his heart ?
Most guilty who the faithless speech begins,
But he who stays to listen also sins."
    She turned away : with wrath her bosom swelling,
Its vest of bark in angry pride repelling ;
But sudden, lo, before her wondering eyes
In altered form she sees the sage arise ;
'Tis ŚIVA'S self before the astonished maid,
In all his gentlest majesty displayed.
She saw, she trembled, like a river's course,
Checked for a moment in its onward force,
By some huge rock amid the torrent hurled
Where erst the foaming waters madly curled.
One foot uplifted, shall she turn away ?
Unmoved the other, shall the maiden stay ?
The silver moon on ŚIVA'S forehead shone,
While softly spake the God in gracious tone :
" O gentle maiden, wise and true of soul,
Lo, now I bend beneath thy sweet control.
Won by thy penance, and thy holy vows,
Thy willing slave SIVA before thee bows."

He spake, and rushing through her languid frame,
At his dear words returning vigour came.
She knew but this, that all her cares were o'er.
Her sorrows ended, she should weep no more !

Canto Sixth.

UMĀ'S ESPOUSALS.

Now gentle UMĀ bade a damsel bear
To ŚIVA, Soul of All, her maiden prayer :
" Wait the high sanction of HIMĀLAYA'S will.
And ask his daughter from the royal hill."
Then ere the God, her own dear Lord, replied,
In blushing loveliness she sought his side.
Thus the young mango hails the approaching spring
By its own tuneful bird's sweet welcoming.

In UMĀ'S ear he softly whispered, yea,
Then scarce could tear him from her arms away.
Swift with a thought he summoned from above
The Seven bright Saints to bear his tale of love.
They came, and She, the Heavenly Dame, was there,
Lighting with glories all the radiant air ;
Just freshly bathed in sacred GAṄGĀ'S tide,
Gemmed with the dancing flowers that deck her side,
And richly scented with the nectarous rill
That heavenly elephants from their brows distil.
Fair strings of pearl their radiant fingers hold,
Clothed are their limbs in hermit-coats of gold ;
Their rosaries, large gems of countless price,
Shone like the fruit that glows in Paradise,
As though the glorious trees that blossom there
Had sought the forest for a life of prayer.

With all his thousand beams the God of Day,
Urging his coursers down the sloping way,
His banner furled at the approach of night,
Looks up in reverence on those lords of light.
Ancient creators : thus the wise, who know,
Gave them a name in ages long ago :
With BRAHMĀ joining in creation's plan,
And perfecting the work His will began ;
Still firm in penance, though the hermit-vow
Bears a ripe harvest for the sages now.
Brightest in glory 'mid that glorious band
See the fair Queen. the Heavenly Lady, stand.
Fixing her loving eyes upon her spouse,
She seemed sent forth to crown the sage's vows
With sweet immortal joy, the dearest prize
Strong prayer could merit from the envious skies.
With equal honour on the Queen and all
Did the kind glance of ŚIVA'S welcome fall.
No partial favour by the good is shown :
They count not station, but the deed alone.
So fair she shone upon his raptured view,
He longed for wedlock's heavenly pleasures too.
What hath such power to lead the soul above
By virtue's pleasant path as wedded love !
Scarce had the holy motive lent its aid
To knit great ŚIVA to the Mountain-Maid,
When KĀMA'S spirit that had swooned in fear
Breathed once again and deemed forgiveness near.
The ancient Sages reverently adored
The world's great Father and its Sovran Lord,
And while a soft ecstatic thrilling ran
O'er their celestial frames, they thus began :

"Glorious the fruit our holy studies bear,
Our constant penance, sacrifice and prayer.
For that high place within thy thoughts we gain
Which fancy strives to reach, but longs in vain.
How blest is he, the glory of the wise,
Deep in whose thoughtful breast thy Godhead lies!
But who may tell his joy who rests enshrined,
O BRAHMĀ'S great Creator, in thy mind!
We dwell on high above the cold moon's ray;
Beneath our mansion glows the God of Day,
But now thy favour lends us brighter beams,
Blest with thy love our star unchanging gleams.
How should we tell what soul-entrancing bliss
Enthrals our spirit at an hour like this?
Great Lord of All, thou Soul of Life indwelling,
We crave one word thy wondrous nature telling.
Though to our eyes thy outward form be shown,
How can we know thee as thou shouldst be known?
In this thy present shape, we pray thee, say
Dost thou create? dost thou preserve or slay?
But speak thy wish; called from our starry rest
We wait, O ŚIVA, for our Lord's behest."

Then answered thus the Lord of glory, while
Flashed from his dazzling teeth so white a smile,
The moon that crowned him poured a larger stream
Of living splendour from that pearly gleam:

"Ye know, great Sages of a race divine,
No selfish want e'er prompts a deed of mine.
Do not the forms—eight varied forms—I wear,
The truth of this to all the world declare?
Now, as that thirsty bird that drinks the rain
Prays the kind clouds of heaven to soothe its pain,

So the Gods pray me, trembling 'neath their foe,
To send a child of mine and end their woe.
I seek the Mountain-Maiden as my bride :
Our hero son shall tame the demon's pride.
Thus the priest bids the holy fire arise,
Struck from the wood to aid the sacrifice.
Go, ask HIMĀLAYA for the lovely maid :
Blest are those bridals which the holy aid.
So shall more glorious honours gild my name,
And win the father yet a prouder fame.
Nor, O ye heavenly Sages, need I teach
What for the maiden's hand shall be your speech,
For still the wise in worthiest honour hold
The rules and precepts ye ordained of old.
This Lady too shall aid your mission there ;
Best for such task a skilful matron's care.
And now, my heralds, to your task away.
When proud HIMĀLAYA holds his royal sway ;
Then meet me where this mighty torrent raves
Down the steep channel with its headlong waves."

Thus while that holiest One his love confessed,
The hermits listened : from each saintly breast
Fled the false shame that yet had lingered there,
And love and wedlock showed divinely fair.

On through the heaven, o'er tracts of swordlike blue,
Towards the gay city, swift as thought, they flew,
Bright with high domes and palaces most fair,
As if proud ALAKĀ were planted there,
Or PARADISE poured forth, in showers that bless,
The rich o'erflowings of its loveliness.
Round lofty towers adorned with gems and gold
Her guardian stream the holy GAṄGĀ rolled.

On every side, the rampart's glowing crown,
Bright wreaths of fragrant flowers hung waving down,—
Flowers that might tempt the maids of heavenly birth
To linger fondly o'er that pride of earth.
Its noble elephants, unmoved by fear,
The distant roaring of the lions hear.
In beauty peerless, and unmatched in speed,
Its thousand coursers of celestial breed.
Through the broad streets bright sylphs and minstrels rove :
Its dames are Goddesses of stream and grove.
Hark ! the drum echoes louder and more loud
From glittering halls whose spires are wrapt in cloud.
It were the thunder, but that voice of fear
Falls not in measured time upon the ear.
'Tis balmy cool, for many a heavenly tree,
With quivering leaves and branches waving free,
Sheds a delightful freshness through the air,—
Fans which no toil of man has stationed there.
The crystal chambers where they feast at night
Flash back the beamings of the starry light.
So brightly pure that silver gleam is shed,
Playing so fondly round each beauteous head,
That all seem gifted from those lights above
With richest tokens of superior love.
How blest its maidens ! cloudless is their day,
And radiant herbs illume their nightly way.
No term of days, but endless youth they know ;
No Death save him who bears the Flowery Bow :
Their direst swoon, their only frenzy this—
The trance of love, the ecstasy of bliss !
Ne'er can their lovers for one hour withstand
The frown, the quivering lip, the scornful hand ;

But seek forgiveness of the angry fair,
And woo her smile with many an earnest prayer.
Around, wide gardens spread their pleasant bowers,
Where the bright Champak opes her fragrant flowers :
Dear shades, beloved by the sylphs that roam
In dewy evening from their mountain home.

Ah ! why should mortals fondly strive to gain
Heaven and its joys by ceaseless toil and pain ?
E'en the Saints envied as their steps drew near,
And owned a brighter heaven was opened here.
They lighted down ; braided was each long tress,
Bright as the pictured flame, as motionless.
HIMĀLAYA'S palace-warders in amaze
On the Seven Sages turned their eager gaze,—
A noble company of celestial race
Where each in order of his years had place,—
Glorious, as when the sun, his head inclining,
Sees his own image 'mid the waters shining.

To greet them with a gift HIMĀLAYA sped,
Earth to her centre shaking at his tread.
By his dark lips with mountain metals dyed,
His arms like pines that clothe his lofty side :
By his proud stature, by his stony breast,
Lord of the Snowy Hills he stood confest.
On to his Council-hall he led the way,
Nor failed due honour to the Saints to pay.
On couch of reed the Monarch bade them rest,
And thus with uplift hands those Heavenly Lords addressed :
"Like soft rain falling from a cloudless sky,
Or fruit, when bloom has failed to glad the eye,

So are ye welcome, Sages ; thus I feel
Ecstatic thrilling o'er my spirit steal,
Changed, like dull senseless iron to burning gold,
Or some rapt creature, when the heavens unfold
To eyes yet dim with tears of earthly care,
The rest, the pleasures, and the glory there.
Long pilgrim bands from this auspicious day
To my pure hill shall bend their constant way.
Famed shall it be o'er all the lands around,
For where the good have been is holy ground.
Now am I doubly pure, for GAṄGĀ'S tide
Falls on my head from heaven and laves my side.
Henceforth I boast a second stream as sweet,
The water, Sages, that has touched your feet.
Twice by your favour is HIMĀLAYA blest,—
This towery mountain that your feet have prest,
And this my moving form is happier still
To wait your bidding, to perform your will.
These mighty limbs that fill the heaven's expanse
Sink down, o'erpowered, in a blissful trance.
So bright your presence, at the glorious sight
My brooding shades of darkness turn to light.
The gloom that haunts my mountain caverns flies,
And cloudy passion in the spirit dies.
O say, if here your arrowy course ye sped
To throw fresh glory round my towering head.
Surely your wish, ye Mighty Ones, can crave
No aid, no service from your willing slave.
Yet deem me worthy of some high behest :
The lord commandeth, and the slave is blest,
Declare your pleasure, then, bright heavenly band :
We crave no guerdon but your sole command.

Yours are we all, HIMĀLAYA and his bride,
And this dear maiden child our hope and pride."

Not once he spake : his cavern mouths around
In hollow echoings gave again the sound.
Of all who speak beyond compare the best,
AṄGIRAS answered at the Saints' request ;

"This power hast thou, great King, and mightier far,
Thy mind is lofty as thy summits are.
Sages say truly, VIṢṆU is thy name :
His spirit breatheth in thy mountain frame.
Within the caverns of thy boundless breast
All things that move and all that move not rest.
How on his head so soft, so delicate,
Could the great Snake uphold the huge earth's weight,
Did not thy roots, far-reaching down to hell,
Bear up the burden and assist him well ?
Thy streams of praise, thy pure rills' ceaseless flow
Make glad the nations wheresoe'er they go,
Till, shedding purity on every side,
They sink at length in boundless Ocean's tide.
Blest is fair GAṄGĀ, for her heavenly stream
Flows from the feet of him that sits supreme ;
And blest once more, O mighty Hill, is she
That her bright waters spring anew from thee.
Vast grew his body when the avenging God
In three huge strides o'er all creation trod.
Above, below, his form increased, but thou
Wast ever glorious and as vast as now.
By thee is famed SUMERU forced to hide
His flashing rays and pinnacles of pride.
For thou hast won thy station in the skies
Mid the great Gods who claim the secrifice.

Firm and unmoved remains thy lofty hill,
Yet thou canst bow before the holy still.
Now—for the glorious work will fall on thee,—
Hear thou the cause of this our embassy.
We also, Mountain Monarch, since we bear
To thee the message, in the labour share.
The Highest, Mightiest, Noblest One, adored
By the proud title of our Sovran Lord :
The crescent moon upon his brow bears he,
And wields the wondrous powers of Deity.
He in this earth and varied forms displayed,
Bound each to other by exchange of aid,
Guides the great world and all the things that are,
As flying coursers whirl the glittering car.
Him good men seek with holy thought and prayer,
Who fills their breast and makes his dwelling there.
When saints, we read, his lofty sphere attain,
They ne'er may fall to this base earth again :
His messengers, great King, we crave the hand
Of thy fair daughter at the God's command.
At such blest union, as of TRUTH and VOICE,
A father's heart should grieve not, but rejoice.
Her Lord is Father of the world, and she
Of all that liveth shall the mother be
Gods that adore him with the Neck of Blue
In homage bent shall hail the Lady too,
And give a glory to her feet with gems
That sparkle in their priceless diadems.
Hear what a roll shall blazon forth thy line,—
Maid, Father, Suitor, Messengers divine !
Give him the chosen lady, and aspire
To call thy son the Universe's Sire,

Who laudeth none, but all mankind shall raise
To Him through endless time the songs of praise."
  Thus while he spake the lady bent her head
To hide her cheek, now blushing rosy red,
And numbered o'er with seeming care the while
Her lotus' petals in sweet maiden guile.
With pride and joy HIMĀLAYA'S heart beat high,
Yet ere he spake he looked to MENĀ'S eye :
Full well he knew a mother's gentle care
Learns her child's heart and love's deep secret there,
And this the hour, he felt when fathers seek
Her eye for answer or her changing cheek,
His eager look HIMĀLAYA scarce had bent
When MENĀ'S eye beamed back her glad assent.
O gentle wives ! your fondest wish is still
To have with him you love one heart, one will.
  He threw his arms around the blushing maid
In queenly garment and in gems arrayed,
Awhile was silent, then in rapture cried,
"Come, O my daughter ! Come, thou destined bride
Of ŚIVA, Lord of All : this glorious band
Of Saints have sought thee at the God's command ;
And I thy sire this happy day obtain
The best reward a father's wish would gain."
  Then to the Saints he cried : "Pure Hermits, see
The spouse of ŚIVA greets your company."
They looked in rapture on the maid, and poured
Their fullest blessing on her heavenly lord.
So low she bowed, the gems that decked her hair
And sparkled in her ear fell loosened there
Then with sweet modesty and joy opprest
She hid her blushes on the Lady's breast

He cheered the mother weeping for her child,
Her own dear UMĀ, till again she smiled :
Such bliss and glory should be hers above,
Yea, mighty SIVA'S undivided love.

They named the fourth for UMĀ'S nuptial day ;
Then sped the Sages on their homeward way ;
And thanked by ŚIVA with a gracious eye
Sought their bright rest amid the stars on high.
Through all those weary days the lover sighed
To wind his fond arms around his gentle bride,
Oh, if the Lord of Heaven could find no rest,
Think, think how Love, strong Love, can tear a mortal's breast !

* CANTO SEVENTH *

Canto Seventh

UMĀ'S BRIDAL.

IN light and glory dawned the expected day
Blest with a kindly star's auspicious ray,
When gaily gathered at HIMĀLAYA'S call
His kinsmen to the solemn festival.
Through the broad city every dame's awake
To grace the bridal for her monarch's sake ;
So great their love for him, this single care
Makes one vast household of the thousands there.
Heaven is not brighter than the royal street
Where flowers lie scattered 'neath the nobles' feet,
And banners waving to the breeze unfold
Their silken broidery over gates of gold.
And she, their child, upon her bridal day
Bears her dear parents' every thought away.
So, when from distant shores a friend returns,
With deeper love each inmost spirit burns.
So, when grim Death restores his prey again
Joy brighter shines from memory of pain.
Each noble matron of HIMĀLAYA'S race
Folds his dear UMĀ in a long embrace,
Pours blessings on her head, and prays her take
Some priceless jewel for her friendship's sake.
With sweetest influence a star of power
Had joined the spotted moon : at that blest hour

To deck fair UMĀ many a noble dame
And many a gentle maid assiduous came.
And well she graced their toil, more brightly fair
With feathery grass and wild flowers in her hair.
A silken robe flowed free below her waist;
Her sumptuous head a glittering arrow graced.
So shines the young unclouded moon at last,
Greeting the sun, its darksome season past.
Sweet-scented Lodhra dust and Sandal dyed
The delicate beauties of the fair young bride,
Veiled with a soft light robe. Her tiring-girls
Then led her to a chamber decked with pearls
And paved with sapphires, where the lulling sound
Of choicest music breathed divinely round.
There o'er the lady's limbs they poured by turns
Streams of pure water from their golden urns.
Fresh from the cooling bath the lovely maid
In fairest white her tender form arrayed.
So opes the Kāsa all her shining flowers
Lured from their buds by softly falling showers.
Then to a court with canopies o'erhead
A crowd of noble dames the maiden led—
A court for solemn rites, where gems and gold
Adorn the pillars that the roof uphold.
There on a couch they set her with her face
Turned toward the east. So lovely then the grace
Of that dear maid, so ravishing her smile,
E'en her attendants turned to gaze awhile;
For though the brightest gems around her lay,
Her brighter beauty stole their eyes away.
Through her long tresses one a chaplet wound,
And one with fragrant grass her temples crowned,

While o'er her head sweet clouds of incense rolled
To try and perfume every shining fold.
Bright dyes of saffron and the scented wood
Adorned her beauty, till the maiden stood
Fairer than GAṄGĀ when the Love-birds play
O'er sandy islets in her silvery bay.
To what rare beauty shall her maids compare
Her clear brow shaded by her glossy hair ?
Less dazzling pure the lovely lotus shines
Flecked by the thronging bees in dusky lines.
Less bright the moon, when a dark band of cloud
Enhances beauties which it cannot shroud.
Behind her ear a head of barley drew
The eye to gaze upon its golden hue.
But then her cheek, with glowing saffron dyed,
To richer beauty called the glance aside.
Though from those lips, where Beauty's guerdon lay,
The vermeil tints were newly washed away,
Yet o'er them, as she smiled, a ray was thrown
Of quivering brightness that was all their own.
"Lay this dear foot upon thy lover's head
Crowned with the moon," the laughing maiden said,
Who dyed her lady's feet—no word spake she,
But beat her with her wreath in playful glee.
Then tiring-women took the jetty dye
To guard, not deck, the beauty of her eye,
Whose languid half-shut glances might compare
With lotus leaves just opening to the air ;
And as fresh gems adorned her neck and arms,
So quickly changing grew the maiden's charms,
Like some fair plant where bud succeeding bud
Unfolds new beauty ; or a silver flood

Where gay birds follow quickly ; or like night,
When crowding stars come forth in all their light.
Oft as the mirror would her glance beguile
She longed to meet her Lord's approving smile.
Her tasteful skill the timid maid essays
To win one smile of love, one word of praise.
The happy mother took the golden dye
And raised to hers young UMĀ'S beaming eye.
Then swelled her bosom with maternal pride
As thus she decked her darling for a bride.
Oh, she had longed to trace on that fair brow
The nuptial line, yet scarce could mark it now.
On UMĀ'S rounded arm the woollen band
Was fixt securely by the nurse's hand.
Blind with the tears that filled her swimming eye,
In vain the mother strove that band to tie.
Spotless as curling foam-flakes stood she there,
As yielding soft, as graceful and as fair :
Or like the glory of an autumn night
Robed by the full moon in a veil of light.
Then at her mother's hest, the maid adored
The spirit of each high ancestral lord,
Nor failed she next the noble dames to greet,
And give due honour to their reverend feet.
They raised the maiden as she bowed her head :
" Thine be the fulness of his love ! " they said.
Half of his being, blessing high as this
Can add no rapture to her perfect bliss.
Well-pleased HIMĀLAYA viewed the pomp and pride
Meet for his daughter, meet for ŚIVA'S bride ;
Then sought the hall with all his friends to wait
The bridegroom's coming with a monarch's state.

Meanwhile by heavenly matrons' care displayed
Upon KUBERA'S lofty mount were laid
The ornaments of ŚIVA, which of yore
At his first nuptials the bridegroom wore.
He laid his hand upon the dress, but how
Shall robes so sad, so holy, grace him now ?
His own dire vesture took a shape as fair
As gentle bridegroom's heart could wish to wear.
The withering skull that glazed the eye with dread,
Shone a bright coronal to grace his head.
That elephant's hide the God had worn of old
Was now a silken robe inwrought with gold.
Ere this his body was with dust besprent :
With unguent now it shed delightful scent ;
And that mid-eye which glittering like a star
Shot the wild terror of its glance afar—
So softly now its golden radiance beamed—
A mark of glory on his forehead seemed.
His twining serpents, destined still to be
The pride and honour of the deity,
Changed but their bodies : in each sparkling crest
The blazing gems still shone their loveliest.
What need of jewels on the brow of Him
Who wears the crescent moon ? No spot may dim
Its youthful beauty, e'en in light of day
Shedding the glory of its quenchless ray.
Well-pleased the God in all his pride arrayed
Saw his bright image mirrored in the blade
Of the huge sword they brought ; then calmly leant
On NANDI'S arm, and toward his bull he went,
Whose broad back covered with a tiger's hide
Was steep to climb as Mount KAILĀŚA'S side.

Yet the dread monster humbly shrank for fear,
And bowed in reverence as his Lord drew near.
The matrons followed him, a saintly throng,
Their ear-rings waving as they dashed along :
Sweet faces, with such glories round them shed
As made the air one lovely lotus bed.
On flew those bright ones : KĀLI came behind,
The skulls that decked her rattling in the wind :
Like the dark rack that scuds across the sky,
With herald lightning and the crane's shrill cry.
Hark ! from the glorious bands that lead the way,
Harp, drum, and pipe, and shrilling trumpet's bray,
Burst through the sky upon the startled ear
And tell the Gods the hour of worship's near.
They came ; the SUN presents a silken shade
Which heaven's own artist for the God had made,
Gilding his brows, as though bright GAṄGĀ rolled
Adown his holy head her waves of gold.
She in her Goddess-shape divinely fair,
And YAMUNĀ, sweet River-Nymph, were there,
Fanning their Lord, that fancy still might deem Swans waved their pinions round each Lady of the Stream.
E'en BRAHMĀ came, Creator, Lord of Might,
And VIṢṆU glowing from the realms of light.
"Ride on," they cried, "thine, thine for ever be
The strength, the glory, and the victory."
To swell his triumph that high blessing came
Like holy oil upon the rising flame.
In those Three Persons the one God was shown,
Each first in place, each last,—not one alone ;
Of ŚIVA, VIṢṆU, BRAHMĀ, each may be
First, second, third, among the Blessed Three.

By INDRA led, each world-upholding Lord
With folded hands the mighty God adored.
In humble robes arrayed, the pomp and pride
Of glorious deity they laid aside.
They signed to NANDI, and the favourite's hand
Guided his eye upon the suppliant band.
He spake to VIṢṆU, and on INDRA smiled,
To BRAHMĀ bowed—the lotus' mystic child.
On all the hosts of heaven his friendly eye
Beamed duly welcome as they crowded nigh.
The Seven Great Saints their blessings o'er him shed,
And thus in answer, with a smile, he said :
"Hail, mighty Sages ! hail, ye Sons of Light !
My chosen priests to celebrate this rite."

Now in sweet tones the heavenly minstrels tell
His praise, beneath whose might TRIPURA fell.
He moves to go : from his moon-crest a ray
Sheds quenchless light on his triumphant way.
On through the air his swift bull bore him well,
Decked with the gold of many a tinkling bell ;
Tossing from time to time his head on high,
Enwreathed with clouds as he flew racing by,
As though in furious charge he had uptorn
A bank of clay upon his mighty horn.

Swiftly they came where in its beauty lay
The city subject to HIMĀLAYA'S sway.
No foeman's foot had ever trod those halls,
No foreign bands encamped around the walls.
Then ŚIVA'S glances fixed their eager hold
On that fair city as with threads of gold.
The God whose neck still gleams with cloudy blue
Burst on the wondering people's upturned view,

And on the earth descended, from the path
His shafts once dinted in avenging wrath.
Forth from the gates a noble army poured
To do meet honour to the mighty Lord.
With all his friends on elephants of state
The King of Mountains passed the city gate,
So gaily decked, the princes all were seen
Like moving hills inwrapt in bowery green.
As the full rushing of two streams that pour
Beneath one bridge with loud tumultuous roar,
So through the city's open gate streamed in
Mountains and Gods with tumult and with din.
So glorious was the sight, wonder and shame,
When ŚIVA bowed him, o'er the Monarch came ;
He knew not he had bent his lofty crest
In reverent greeting to his heavenly guest.
HIMĀLAYA, joying in the festive day,
Before the immortal bridegroom led the way
Where heaps of gay flowers burying half the feet
Lay breathing odours through the crowded street.
   Careless of all beside, each lady's eye
Must gaze on ŚIVA as the troop sweeps by.
One dark-eyed beauty will not stay to bind
Her long black tresses, floating unconfined
Save by her little hand ; her flowery crown
Hanging neglected and unfastened down.
One from her maiden tore her foot away
On which the dye, all wet and streaming, lay,
And o'er the chamber rushing in her haste,
Where'er she stepped, a crimson footprint traced.
Another at the window takes her stand ;
One eye is dyed,—the pencil in her hand.

Here runs an eager maid, and running, holds
Loose and ungirt her flowing mantle's folds,
Whilst, as she strives to close the parting vest,
Its brightness gives new beauty to her breast.
Oh ! what a sight ! the crowded windows there
With eager faces excellently fair,
Like sweetest lilies, for their dark eyes fling
Quick glances quivering like the wild bee's wing.
Onward in peerless glory ŚIVA passed ;
Gay banners o'er his way their shadows cast,
Each palace dome, each pinnacle and height
Catching new lustre from his crest of light.
On swept the pageant : on the God alone
The eager glances of the dames were thrown :
On his bright form they fed the rapturous gaze,
And only turned to marvel and to praise :
"Oh, well and wisely, such a lord to gain
The Mountain-Maid endured the toil and pain.
To be his slave were joy ; but Oh, how blest
The wife—the loved one—lying on his breast !
Surely in vain, had not the Lord of Life
Matched this fond bridegroom and this loving wife,
Had been his wish to give the worlds a mould
Of perfect beauty ! Falsely have they told
How the young flower-armed God was burnt by fire
At the red flash of ŚIVA'S vengeful ire.
No : jealous LOVE a fairer form confessed,
And cast away his own, no more the loveliest.
How glorious is the Mountain King, how proud
Earth's stately pillar, girt about with cloud !
Now will he lift his lofty head more high,
Knit close to ŚIVA by this holy tie."

Such words of praise from many a bright-eyed dame
On ŚIVA'S ear with soothing witchery came.
Through the broad streets 'mid loud acclaim he rode,
And reached the palace where the King abode.
There he descended from his monster's side,
As the sun leaves a cloud at eventide.
Leaning on VIṢṆU'S arm he passed the door
Where mighty BRAHMĀ entered in before,
Next INDRA came, and all the host of heaven,
The noble Saints and those great Sages seven.
Then led they ŚIVA to a royal seat ;
Fair gifts they brought, for such a bridegroom meet :
With all due rites, the honey and the milk,
Rich gems were offered and two robes of silk.
At length by skilful chamberlains arrayed
They led the lover to the royal maid.
Thus the fond Moon disturbs the tranquil rest
Of Ocean glittering with his foamy crest,
And leads him on, his proud waves swelling o'er,
To leap with kisses on the clasping shore.
He gazed on UMĀ. From his lotus eyes
Flashed out the rapture of his proud surprise.
Then calm the current of his spirit lay
Like the world basking in an autumn day.
They met ; and true love's momentary shame
O'er the blest bridegroom and his darling came.
Eye looked to eye, but, quivering as they met,
Scarce dared to trust the rapturous gazing yet.
In the God's hand the priest has duly laid
The radiant fingers of the Mountain-Maid,
Bright, as if LOVE with his dear sprays of red
Had sought that refuge in his hour of dread.

From hand to hand the soft infection stole,
Till each confessed it in the inmost soul.
Fire filled his veins, with joy she trembled ; such
The magic influence of that thrilling touch.

How grows their beauty, when two lovers stand
Eye fixt on eye, hand fondly linkt in hand !
Then how, unblamed, may mortal minstrel dare
To paint in words the beauty of that pair !

Around the fire in solemn rite they trod,
The lovely lady and the glorious God ;
Like day and starry midnight when they meet
In the broad plains at lofty MERU'S feet.
Thrice at the bidding of the priest they came
With swimming eyes around the holy flame.
Then at his word the bride in order due
Into the blazing fire the parched grain threw,
And toward her face the scented smoke she drew,
Which softly wreathing o'er her fair cheek hung,
And round her ears in flower-like beauty clung.
As o'er the incense the sweet lady stooped,
The ear of barley from her tresses drooped,
And rested on her cheek, beneath the eye
Still brightly beaming with the jetty dye.

"This flame be witness of your wedded life :
Be just, thou husband, and be true, thou wife !"
Such was the priestly blessing on the bride.
Eager she listened, as the earth when dried
By parching summer suns drinks deeply in
The first soft droppings when the rains begin.
"Look, gentle UMĀ," cried her Lord, "afar
Seest thou the brightness of yon polar star ?

Like that unchanging ray thy faith must shine."
Sobbing, she whispered, "Yes, for ever thine."

The rite is o'er. Her joyful parents now
At BRAHMĀ'S feet in duteous reverence bow.
Then to fair UMĀ spake the gracious Power
Who sits enthroned upon the lotus flower :
" O beautiful lady, happy shalt thou be,
And hero children shall be born of thee ; "
Then looked in silence : vain the hope to bless
The bridegroom, ŚIVA, with more happiness.

Then fron the altar, as prescribed of old,
They turned, and rested upon seats of gold ;
And, as the holy books for men ordain,
Were sprinkled duly with the moistened grain.
High o'er their heads sweet Beauty's Queen displayed
Upon a stem of reed a cool green shade,
While the young lotus-leaves of which 'twas made
Seemed, as they glistened to the wondering view,
All richly pearled with drops of beady dew.
In twofold language on each glorious head
The Queen of Speech her richest blessings shed ;
In strong, pure, godlike utterance for his ear,
To her in liquid tones, soft, beautifully clear.

Now for awhile they gaze where maids divine
In graceful play the expressive dance entwine ;
Whose eloquent motions, with an actor's art,
Show to the life the passions of the heart.

The rite was ended ; then the heavenly band
Prayed ŚIVA, raising high the suppliant hand :
" Now, for the dear sake of thy lovely bride
Have pity on the gentle God," they cried,

" Whose tender body thy fierce wrath has slain :
Give all his honour, all his might again."
Well pleased, he smiled, and gracious answer gave :
ŚIVA himself now yields him KĀMA'S slave.
When duly given, the great will ne'er despise
The gentle pleading of the good and wise.

Now have they left the wedded pair alone ;
And ŚIVA takes her hand within his own
To lead his darling to the bridal bower,
Decked with bright gold and all her sumptuous dower.
She blushes sweetly as her maidens there
Look with arch smiles and glances on the pair ;
And for one moment, while the damsels stay,
From him she loves turns her dear face away.

NOTES.

CANTO FIRST

THE Hindu Deity of War, the leader of the celestial armies, is known by the names Kārtikeya and Skanda. He is represented with six faces and corresponding arms, and is mounted upon a peacok.

Himālaya. P. 3, L. 1.] Mansion of Snow; from hima, snow, and ālaya, mansion.

Pṛthu. P. 3, L. 5.] It is said that in the reign of this fabulous monarch, gods, saints, demons, and other supernatural beings, drained of milked from the earth various treasures, appointing severally one of their own class as the recipient, or Calf, to use the word of the legend. Himālaya was thus highly favoured by the sacred Mount Meru, and the other hills. The story is found in the sixth chapter of the Harivaṁśa, which forms a supplement to the Mahābhārata.

Still the fair pearls, &c. P. 4, L. 13.] It was the belief of the Hindus that elephants wore these precious jewels in their heads.

Till heavenly minstrels, &c. P. 4, L. 23.] A class of demi-gods, the songsters of the Hindu Paradise, or Indra's heaven.

There magic herbs, &c. P. 4, L. 29.] Frequent allusion is made by Kālidāsa and other Sanskrit poets to a phosphoric light emitted by plants at night.

E'en the wild kine &c. P. 5, L. 17.] The Chouri, or long brush, used to wisk off insects and flies, was with the Hindus what the sceptre is with us. It was usually made of the tail-hairs of the Yak, or Bos Grunniens. Thus the poet represents these animals as doing honour to the Monarch of Mountains with these emblems of sovereignty.

That the bright Seven. P. 6, L. 3.] The Hindus call the constellation Ursa Major the seven Ṛṣis, or Saints. They will appear as actors in the course of the poem.

And once when Indra's might. P. 6, L. 27.] We learn from the Rāmāyaṇa that the mountains were originally furnished with wings, and that they flew through the air with the speed of the wind. For fear lest they should suddenly fall in their flight, Indra, King of the Gods, struck off their pinions with his thunderbolt ; but Maināka was preserved from a similar fate by the friendship of Ocean, to whom he fled for refuge.

Born once again & c. P. 7, L. 5.] The reader will remember the Hindu belief in the Transmigration of Souls. The story alluded to by the poet is this :—" Dakṣa was the son of Brahmā and father of Satī, whom, at the recommendation of the Ṛṣis, or Sages, he espoused to Śiva, but he was never wholly reconciled to the uncouth figure and practices of his son-in-law. Having undertaken to celebrate a solemn sacrifice, he invited all the Gods except Śiva, which so incensed Satī, that she threw herself into the sacrificial fire."—(Wilson, Specimems of Hindu Theatre, Vol. II. p. 263.) The name of Satī, meaning good, true, chaste woman, is the modern Suttee, as it is corruptly written.

As the blue offspring of the Turquois Hills. P. 7, L. 23.] These hills are placed in Ceylon. The precious stone grows, it is said, at the sound of thunder in the rainy season.

At her stern penance. P. 8, L. 4.] This is described in the fifth canto. The meaning of the name Umā is " Oh, do not."

The Gods' bright river. P. 8, L. 15.] The celestial Ganges, which falls from heaven upon Himālaya's head, and continues its course on earth,

Young Kāma's arrow. P. 10, L. 16.] Kāma, the Hindu Cupid, is armed with a bow, the arrows of which are made of flowers.

And brighter than Aśoka's rich leaves. P. 10, L. 21.] Nothing, we are told, can exceed the beauty of this tree when in full bloom. It is, of course, a general favourite with the poets of India.

The strings of pearl. P. 10, L. 23.]

> "Then, too, the pearl from out its shell
> Unsightly, in the sunless sea
> (As' twere a spirit, forced to dwell
> In form unlovely) was set free,
> And round the neck of woman threw
> A light it lent and borrowed too."
> MOORE—Loves of the Angels.

Moore is frequently the best interpreter, unconsciously, of an Indian poet's thought. It is worth remarking, that the Sanskrit word muktā, pearl (literally freed), signifies also the spirit released from mundance existene, and re-integrated with its divine original.

Compare Shakespeare in 'Cymbeline' : Cytherea......How bravely thou becomes thy bed etc. and in 'Romeo and Juliet' :

Oh, she doth teach the torches......over her fellows shows.

The sweetest note that e'er the Koil poured. P. 11, L. 7.] The Kokila, or Koil, the black or Indian cuckoo, is the bulbul or nightingale of Hindustan. It is also the herald of spring, like its European namesake, and the female bird is the especial messenger of Love.

When holy Nārada. P. 11, L. 23.] A divine sage, son of Brahmā.

The holy bull. P. 11, L. 23.] The animal on which the God Śiva rides, as Indra on the elephant.

Who takes eight various forms. P. 12, L. 21.] Śiva is called Wearer of the Eight Forms, as being identical with the Five Elements, Mind, Individuality, and Crude Matter.

Where the pale moon on Śiva's forehead. P. 13, L. 19.] Śiva's crest is the new moon, which is sometimes described as forming a third eye in his forehead. We shall find frequent allusions to this in the course of the poem.

CANTO SECOND.

While impious Tāraka. P. 17, L. 1.] A demon who, by a long course of austerities, had acquired power even over the Gods. The Hindu notion is familiar to most of us from Southey's "Curse of Kehama."

Whose face turns every way. P. 17. L. 10.] Brahmā is represented with four faces, one towards each point of the compass.

The mystic three. P. 17, L. 16.] "The triad of qualities," a philosophical term familiar to all the systems of Hindu speculation. They are thus explained in the Tattwa Samāsa, a text-book of the Sāṅkhya school :—"Now it is asked, What is the 'triad of qualities'? It is replied, The triad of qualities consists of 'Goodness,' 'Foulness,' and 'Darkness.' By the 'triad of qualities' is meant the 'three qualities.' Goodness is endlessly diversified, accordingly as it is exemplified in calmness, lightness, complacency, attainment of wishes, kindliness, contentment, patience, joy, and the like; summarily, it consists of happiness. 'Foulness' is endlessly diversified, accordingly as it is exemplified in grief, distress, separation, excitement, anxiety, fault-finding, and the like; summarily, it consists of pain. 'Darkness' is endlessly diversified, accordingly as it is exemplified in envelopment, ignorance, disgust, abjectness heaviness, sloth, drowsiness, intoxication, and the like; summarily, it consists of delusion."

Thou when a longing, &c. P. 17, L. 23.] "Having divided his own substance, the mighty power became half male, half female, or nature active and passive."—Manu, Ch. I.

The sacred hymns. P. 18, L. 21.] Contained in the Vedas, or Holy Scriptures of the Hindus.

The word of praise. P. 18, L. 22.] The mystic syllable OM, prefacing all the prayers and most of the writings of the Hindus. It implies the Indian triad, and expresses the Three in One.

They hail thee, Nature. P. 18, L. 25.] The object of Nature's activity, according to the Sāṅkhya system, is "the final liberation of individul soul." The incompetency of nature, an irrational principle, to institute a course of action for a definite purpose, and the unfitness of rational soul to regulate the acts on an agent whose character it imperfectly apprehends, constitute a principal argument with the theistical Sāṅkhyas for the necessity of a Providence, to whom the ends of existence are known, and by whom Nature is guided.........The atheistical

Sāṅkhyas, on the other hand, contend that there is no occasion for a guiding Providence, but that the activity of nature, for the purpose of accomplishing soul's object, is an intuitive necessity, as illustrated in the following passage :—As it is a function of milk, an unintelligent (substance), to nourish the calf, so it is the office of the chief principle (nature) to liberate the soul."—Prof. Wilson's Sāṅkhya Kārikā.

Hail Thee the stranger Spirit, &c. P. 18, L. 27.] " Soul is witness, solitary, bystander, spectator, passive."—Sāṅkh. Kār. verse xix.

See, Varuṇa's noose. P. 19, L. 17.] The God of Water.

Weak is Kubera's hand. P. 19, L. 19.] The God of Wealth.

Yama's sceptre. P. 19, L. 23.] The God and Judge of the Dead.

The Lords of Light. P. 19, L. 27.] The Ādityas, twelve in number, are forms of the sun, and appear to represent him as distinct in each month of the year.

The Rudras. P. 20, L. 3.] A class of demi-gods, eleven in number, said to be inferior manifestations of Śiva, who also bears this name.

E'en as on earth, &c. P. 20, L. 9.] Thus the commandment, —Thou shalt not kill, is abrogated by the injunction to kill animals for sacrifice.

The heavenly Teacher. P. 20, L. 17.] Bṛhaspati, the son of Aṅgiras.

His own dear flower. P. 20, L. 20.] The lotus, on which Brahmā is represented reclining.

Their flashing jewels. P. 21, L. 17.] According to the Hindu belief, serpents wear precious jewels in their hands.

Chakra.] A discus, or quoit. the weapon of Viṣṇu.

As water bears to me. P. 24, L. 4.] " HE, having willed to produce various beings from his own divine substance, first with a thought created the waters, and placed in them a productive seed."—Manu, Ch. I.

Mournful braids. P. 24, L. 8.] As a sign of mourning, especially for the loss of their husbands, the Hindustani women collect their long hair into a braid, called in Sanskrit veṇi.

The mango twig. P. 24, L. 20.] We shall meet with several allusions to this tree as the favourite of Love and the darling of the bees.

CANTO THIRD

Who angers thee, &c. P. 27, L. 11.] To understand properly this speech of Kāma, it is necessary to be acquainted with some of the Hindu notions regarding a future state. "The highest kind of happiness is absorption into the divine essence, or the return of that portion of spirit which is combined with the attributes of humanity to its original source. This happiness, according to the philosopher, is to be obtained only by the most perfect abstraction from the world and freedom from passion, even while in a state of terrestrial existence........ Besides this ultimate felicity, the Hindus have several minor degrees of happiness, amongst which is the enjoyment of Indra's Swarga, or, in fact, of a Muhammadan Paradise. The degree and duration of the pleasures of this paradise are proportioned to the merits of those admitted to it; and they who have enjoyed this lofty region of Swarga, but whose virtue is exhausted, revisit the habitation of mortals."—Prof. Wilson's Megha Dūta. Compare also "The Lord's Song."—Specimens of Old Indian Poetry, pp. 67, 68.

Indra, therefore, may be supposed to feel jealous whenever a human being aspires to something higher than that heaven of which he is the Lord.

The "chain of birth" alluded to is of course the metempsychosis, or transmigration or souls, a belief which is not to be looked upon (says Prof. Wilson in the preface to his edition of the Sāṅkhya Kārikā) as a mere popular superstition. It is the main principle of all Hindu metaphysics; it is the foundation of all Hindu philosophy. The great object of their philosophical research in every system, Brahminical or Buddhist, is the discovery of the means of putting a stop to further transmigration; the discontinuance of corporeal being ; the liberation of soul from body.

As on that Snake. P. 29, L. 1.] Śeṣa, the Serpent King, is in the Hindu mythology the supporter of the earth, as, in one of the fictions of the Edda :

"That sea-snake, tremendous curled,
Whose monstrous circle girds the world."

He is also the couch and canopy of the God Viṣṇu, or. as he is here called, Kṛṣṇa,—that hero being one of his incarnations, and considered identical with the deity himself.

The triple world. P. 29, L. 32.] Earth, heaven, and hell.

His fearful Rati. P. 30, L. 15.] The wife of Kāma, or Love.

To where Kubera, &c. P. 30, L. 24.] The demi-god Kubera was regent of the north.

Nor waited for the maiden's touch. P. 30, L. 29.] Referring to the Hindu notion that the Aśoka blossoms at the touch of a woman's foot. So Shelley says :

" I doubt not, the flowers of that garden sweet Rejoiced in the sound of her gentle feet."
Sensitive Plant.

Grouping the syllables. P. 31, L. 2.] This comparison seems forced rather too far to suit a European taste. Kālidāsa is not satisfied with calling the mango-spray the Arrow of Love ; he must tell us that its leaves are the feathers, and that the bees have marked it with the owner's name.

That loveliest flower. P. 31, L. 3.] The Karṇikāra.

His flowery Tilaka. P. 31, L. 12.] The name of a tree ; it also means a mark made with coloured earths or unguents upon the forehead and between the eyebrows, either as an ornament or a sectarial distinction ; the poet intends the word to convey both ideas at once here. In this passage is another comparison of the mango-spray : it is called the lip of Love ; its rouge is the blush of morning, and its darker beautifying powder the clustering bees. From the universal custom of dying the lips, the Sanskrit poets are constantly speaking of their "vermeil tints," &c.. as will be sufficiently evident in the course of this work.

The Hermit's servant. P. 32, L. 29.] By name Nandi.

His neck of brightly-beaming blue. P. 33, L. 24.] An ancient legend tells us that after the deluge the ocean was churned by Gods and Demons, in order to recover the Amṛta and other treasures that had been lost in it :

" Then loud and long a joyous sound
  Rang through the startled sky :
' Hail to the Amrit, lost and found !
  A thousand voices cry.
But from the wondrous churning streamed
  A poison fierce and dread,
Burning like fire ; where'er it streamed
  Thick noisome mists were spread.
The wasting venom onwards went,
  And filled the Worlds with fear,
Till Brahmā to their misery bent
  His gracious pitying ear ;
And Śiva those destroying streams
  Drank up at Brahmā's beck.
Still in thy throat the dark flood gleams,
  God of the azure neck !"

Specimens of Old Indian Poetry—Churning of the Ocean.

Gates of sense. P. 34, L. 5.] The eyes, ears,&c.

CANTO FOURTH.

Speak to me Kāma P. 41, L. 9]

Compare Shakespeare in Venus and Adonis : My tongue cannot express.. ...

Late, dim, and joyless shall his rising be. P. 42, L. 32.] The Moon, in Hindu mythology, is a male deity.

This line of bees. P. 43, L. 7.] Kāma's bow is sometimes represented as strung in this extraordinary manner.

And stain this foot. P. 43, L. 24.] "Staining the soles of the feet with a red colour, derived from the Mehndee, the Lac, &c., is a favourite practice of the Hindu toilet."—WILSON.

CANTO FIFTH

And worn with resting on her rosary. P. 52, L. 32.] The Hindus use their rosaries much as we do, carrying them in their hands or on their wrists. As they turn them over, they repeat an inaudible prayer, or the name of the particular deity they worship, as Viṣṇu or Śiva. The Rudrākṣa mālā (which we may suppose Umā to have used) is a string of the seeds or berries of the Eleocarpus, and especially dedicated to Śiva. It should contain 108 berries or beads, each of which is fingered with the mental repetition of one of Śiva's 108 appellations.

Not e'en her boy. P. 53 L. 16] Kārtikeya, the God of War.

That friendship soon in gentle heart is bred. P. 57, L. 6.]

"Amor in cor gentil ratto s'apprende."

DANTE.

The Heavenly Dame. P. 67. L. 13]. Arundhatī, wife of one of the Seven Saints.

The Boar.] An Avatāra, or incarnation of Viṣṇu. In this form he preserved the world at the deluge.

That thirsty bird. P. 69, L. 31]. The Chātaka, supposed to drink nothing but rain-water.

Proud Alakā. P. 70, L. 28]. The capital of Kubera, the God of Wealth.

The bright Champaka. P. 72, L. 4].

"The maid of India blest again to hold
In her broad lap the Champak's leaves of gold."

Lalla Rookh.

Aṅgiras. P. 74, L. 6]. One of the Seven Saints; the father of Bṛhaspati, the teacher of the gods.

Vast grew his body. P. 74, L. 25.] Alluding to the Vāmana, or Dwarf Avatāra of Viṣṇu, wrought to restrain the pride of the giant Bāli. who had expelled the Gods from heaven. In that form he presented himself before the giant, and asked him for three paces of land to build a hut. Bali ridiculed and granted the request. The dwarf immediately grew to a prodigious size, so that he measured the earth with one pace, and the heavens with another.

Sumeru. P. 74, L. 29.] Another name of the sacred Mount Meru; or rather the same word, with su, good, prefixed.

CANTO SEVENTH

Kailāsa's side. P. 85, L. 32.] A mountain, the fabulous residence of Kubera, and favourite haunt of Śiva, placed by the Hindus among the Himālayas.

Kālī came behind. P. 86, L. 8.] The name of one of the divine matrons. The word also signifies in Sanskrit a row or succession of clouds, suggesting the comparison which follows.

In twofold language. P. 92, L. 20.] In Sanskrit and Prakrit. The latter is a softened modification of the former. to which it bears the same relation as Italian to Latin; it is spoken by the female characters of the Hindu drama.

and the fruits of its decline,
And all by which the soul is charmed, enraptured,
feasted, fed,
Wouldst thou the earth and heaven itself in

I name thee, O Sakuntala, and all at once is said.

I

Lord of poets, Kalidasa, in the bower of the heavenly, magic tree,
You are sitting alone with your beloved
On the throne of the heir-apparent of youth.
To bear your emerald footstool
The whole world is here; the whole sky
Holds the golden royal umbrella
Over your head alone; six handmaidens,
The six seasons,[1] pass round and round dancing;
They pour in ever-new goblets
The stream of new-coloured wines
On your thirsty youth; all creation
Is an inner apartment, a bridal chamber.
There is no sorrow, no misery, not a living soul;
Only you are the King, and there is your Queen.

II

To-day you are only a poet, no one else;
Where is your king's assembly, where is your home,
Where is Ujjaini? Where is to-day
Your lord, Kalidas, the great king?

1. With special reference to the great poet's poem Ritusamhara treating of the seasons.

There is no trace of any one. To-day one thinks
You were for all time a citizen
Of Alaka,[2] the city of perpetual joy. In the evening
On the cloud-capped mountain, after his meditation,
When the Lord Siva danced in ecstatic joy,
The rain-laden cloud thundered as a drum,
And the flashing lightning kept time to the measure.
You sang the song of praise ; at the end,
Taking the peacock feather from her ear,
Gauri, with a kindly smile, placed it on your head.

III

When you chanted, poet, to the god and goddess,
Siva and Parvati, the song of the birth of Kartika,
All round stood the ghostly attendants ; on the mountain crest
Descended slow the peaceful evening clouds.
The lightning did not play, the thunder was mute ;
Kartika's peacock lowering its tail
Stood quietly by the side of Parvati,
Curving its lifted neck ; sometimes, in a gentle smile
Trembled the lips of the goddess ; anon a long sigh
Was breathed unnoticed ; again, the swelling tears
Appeared at the corners of the eyes ; when at length
Confused shame descended silently
On her lowered eyelids, you, poet, glancing at the goddess,
Suddenly stopped your unfinished song.

IV

By the Manasa lake on the peak of Kailasa
In a solitary world you were in the courtyard
Of Siva's mansion his own poet—poet Kalidas !
Like the blue sheen on Siva's throat, the cool blue light

2. The mythical city on the Alakananda river in the Himalayas. It belonged to Kubera, the treasurer of the gods, and contained untold wealth.

In the ever-still thick clouds of June
Under the bright prayer-world of the Seven Risis.[3]
You still live in the paradise of the mind
And will dwell there for ever, O Master-poet,
Filling the world with the song of the life of Siva.
In the midst of it appeared the dream-lightning
Of the King's palace at Ujjaini,
King Vikramaditya, the assembly of the nine gems.[4]
That dream disappeared, the great picture vanished ;
You remain for ever the poet in the mind's heaven.

V

Did you not have joy and sorrow,
Hope and despair even like ourselves,
O immortal poet ? Were not there always
The intrigue of a royal court, the stabbing in the back ?
Did you never suffer humiliation,
Affront, distrust, injustice,
Want, hard and pitiless ? Did you never pass
A sleepless night of poignant agony ?
Yet above them all, unconcerned, pure,
Has flowered your poem—a lotus of beauty
Opening to the sun of joy ;—nowhere
Does it show any sign of sorrow, offliction, evil times.
Churning the sea of life you drank the poison,[5]
The nectar that arose you gave away !

3. The Great Bear constellation.
4. The famous nine men at the court of King Vikramaditya, Kalidasa being the brightest jewel among them.
5. Kalidasa is here compared to Siva himself, who, when the poison gushed out from the churned ocean and threatened the lives of the gods and demons, swallowed it and the blue tint on his throat was the result.
